Another great evil among farmers, and one that bears heavily against the progress of improvement, is the spirit of speculation which too generally prevails in this country. Occasionally a farmer is seen who invests his surplus income in improvement of his farm, thereby increasing its productiveness and beauty, and affording increased means of enjoyment to himself and family ; but the great majority expend all their means in the purchase of more hand than is useful to them - oven incurring large debts for this purpose, on which heavy interest must be paid, with increased taxes and generally much trouble and vexation.
