

Farmer's Department.

Hymn of the Harvest. We gather them in the bright green leaves...

We gather them in the budding plumage of the yellow and blacked crane. To cheer our guests at the annual board...

Birds—Their Utility. We do not always know our best friends. But experience sometimes teaches us...

The Baltimore Oriole, a beautiful and well known bird, called sometimes Gold-robbin, Hang-bird, etc. It feeds chiefly on insects...

The following descriptions may throw light upon the treatment these birds have a right to claim at our hands:

The Baltimore Oriole, a beautiful and well known bird, called sometimes Gold-robbin, Hang-bird, etc. It feeds chiefly on insects...

The Crow Blackbird, is less numerous than the species just described. They follow our cattle, and catch and devour the insects that molest them...

The American Crow, devours everything eatable, without much apparent choice, whether fruits, seeds, vegetables, reptiles, insects, dead animals, etc.

The King-bird lives wholly on insects and worms, without any miscellaneous propensity, unless it be occasionally to devour honeybees.

The Cat-bird is constantly employed in devouring wasps, worms, etc., but does not always appear our fruits. They devour of the insects they destroy.

The Wood-thrush lives on worms, beetles, etc., and never commits depredations of any kind. Their residence is much more constant in the extreme South, than farther north.

The Blue-bird confines himself to the destruction of beetles, spiders, grubs, wire-worms, etc., and though they attack the same and wild cherry, and other wild berries, they do no injury to the fruits or vegetables of the garden.
