SWORD OF THE SPIRIT.

The world has many a battle field, Where soldiers fight for fame, And many, at his commander's word, Lost they might lose a name. And every soldier wears a sword, And keeps it polished bright, And he who has his sword drawn, To draw his sword is right.

THE QUAKER'S REVENGE.

OBADIAH LAWSON and Watt Dood were neighbors; that is, they lived within half a mile of each other, and no person lived between their respective farms, which would have joined, had not a little strip of prairie land extended itself sufficiently to keep them separated. Dood was the oldest settler, and from his youth up had entertained a singular hatred against Quakers; therefore, when he was informed that Lawson, a regular disciple of that class of people, had purchased the next farm to his, he declared he would make him glad to move away again. Accordingly, a system of petty annoyances was commenced by him, and every time one of Lawson's hogs chanced to stray upon Dood's place, he was beaten by men and dogs, and most severely abused.

"Do you dare to say I killed her?"

"How do you know she is dead?" replied the man. Dood hit his lip, hesitated a moment, and then turning, walked into the house. A couple of days passed by, and the morning of the third one had broken, as the hired man met friend Lawson, riding in search of his filly. No threat of re-entrance escaped him; he did not even go to law to recover damages, but calmly awaited his plan and hour of revenge. It came at last. Watt Dood had a Durham heifer, for which he had paid a heavy price, and upon which he counted to make great gains. One morning, just as Obadiah was sitting down, his eldest son came in with the information that neighbor Dood's heifer had broken down the fence, entered the yard, and after eating most of the cabbages, had trampled the well made beds and the vegetables they contained, out of all shape—a mischief impossible to repair.

Fearful Ride on a Locomotive.

"Howard," the correspondent of the New York Times, who rode upon an excursion train upon the Lake Shore road, describes a ride on the locomotive as follows: Twenty nine miles in thirty minutes!—Describe it! Impossible! I have always noticed that engineers were quiet, dignified, sober people, and now I understand it—I should regard a joking, trifling engineer, as I would a jolly, whistling undertaker. Describe my ride on the Huron? Never! The whistle nearly blew my ears off; the rushing air wore out my eyes; the joggling of the engine as it leaped from rail to rail all but broke the end of my backbone off; my hat, which was blown away in less than a minute after we started, was caught by the fireman in a miraculous manner; and every nerve in my body jumped, quivered and wired, as relentlessly the iron steed kept up to "time."

Are Women Naturally Polite?

Mrs. Willys asks that question, and then elaborately answers it herself, thus: Are women naturally polite, did you ask, dear, good-natured Pablo? Did you ever know a woman to make room in an omnibus, on a side, when Number Six, was entering, frowning and velvetted, until ordered by the driver? Did you ever know a little pair of gaiter boots to turn one inch either to the right or left when they could have saved you from a streaming gutter by the operation? Patent leathers don't behave so—not they!

Sublime Idea.

The closing passage in one of Professor Mitchell's recent lectures in New York on astronomy after speaking of the unfathomable distances which no telescope can penetrate, lying far beyond the system on which the earth revolves, and yet filled with independent system of words of infinite numbers, as follows: "Light traverses a space at the rate of a million miles a minute, yet the light from the nearest star requires ten years to reach the earth, and Herschels telescope revealed stars 2,300 times further distant. The great telescope of Lord Ross, pursued the creations of God still deeper into space, and having resolved the nebulae of the Milky Way into stars, beautiful diamond points glittering through the black darkness beyond. When he beheld this amazing abyss—when he reflected upon the immense distance, enormous magnitude, and the countless millions of worlds that belonged to them, it seemed to him as though the wild dream of the German poet had been more than realized. God called a man in his dream into the vestibule of heaven, saying 'come hither and I will show thee the glory of my house. And to his angels who stood around his throne he said, 'take him, strip him of his affection, put a new breath into his nostrils; but touch not his human heart—the heart that fears and hopes and trembles. A moment, and it was done, the man stood ready for his unknown voyage. Under guidance of a mighty angel, with sounds of flying pinions they sped away from the battlements of heaven. Some time on the mighty angels wings they fled through Sahara's darkness, wilderness to death—length from a distance not counted save in the arithmetic of Heaven, a light beamed upon them—a sleepy form as seen thro' a hazy cloud. In a moment the blazing of the sun around—a moment the wheeling of planets; then came long eternities of twilight, then again on the right hand and on the left appeared more constellations. At last the man sank down crying, 'Angel, I can go no further; let me lie down in the grave and hide myself from the infinitude of the universe, for end there is none.'—'End there is none!' demanded the angel. And from the glittering stars that shone around, there came a coral shout, 'End there is none!'—'End there is none.'"

A Few Plain Questions.

A correspondent of the Christian Observer asks of the Evangelist, and other anti-slavery editors who are in the habit of denouncing slaveholding as sin, a categorical answer to the following inquiries: 1st. In the covenant which God made with Abraham, and his spiritual children, which is understood to be the Gospel covenant, was it wrong to provide for the purchase of bondmen, or slaves? Genesis, chap. 17: 12 and 13. 2d. Was it wrong for the angel, when meeting Hagar in the wilderness, fleeing from her mistress, who had treated her badly, to send her back into the state of servitude from which she had so happily escaped? Gen. 9. 3d. Was it wrong for Moses, acting under a direct commission from God, to authorize the Israelites to purchase bondmen, or slaves, from the heathen, and leave them as an inheritance to their children forever? Levit. 25: 44, 45, 46. 4th. Was it wrong for the Savior, when he healed the Centurion's servant, to commend the faith of the master without reproving him for the sin of slaveholding? 5th. Was it wrong for the Apostle Paul to send a runaway slave back to his master Philemon, without a single word of admonition about the sin of slaveholding? 6th. Was it wrong for the Apostle to speak of masters who had servants under the yoke (or servitude) as faithful and beloved, and to state that as a reason why their slaves (under the yoke) should render them a cheerful obedience? 1 Tim. 6: 1, 2, 3. 7th. Was it wrong for the Apostle in immediate connection with such teaching to condemn those who teach otherwise, as ignorant and proud, doing about questions and strife of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings, and perverse disputings? 1 Tim. 6: 4, 5, 6. 8th. Is there anything in the relation of master to his servant to make that to be a sin now, which was not a sin in the days of Paul and Moses? 9th. If slaveholding be a sin, have not Paul, and Jesus, and Moses, and the Great God himself (I speak it reverently,) given explicit permission for the existence of a sin, without a single word of rebuke? 10th. Is not the "royal law"—that shall love thy neighbor as thyself—as truly and readily obeyed by the master to his slave, as by the employer to those in his service—and is there not as much injustice and oppression exercised over those in servitude at the North as there is over the colored population of the South?

Apprentices.

How extremely difficult it has in all ages been found, to convince the Apprentices that his own interest and prosperity are advanced exactly in proportion to the degree of faithfulness with which he discharges his duties to his employer, and the exertion he makes to promote his master's interest. This arises in a measure, from the proneness of young men to take thought only for the present. They do not generally give themselves the least anxiety about the future, and seem to forget that they too may at some period not far distant become masters and employers, and called upon to occupy responsible stations in society. We have often been pained to witness the want of respect manifested by apprentices for their employers, and the degree of indifference and neglect shown by the former towards the interest of the latter. Indeed so extensive has been the mischief arising from this ruinous and mischievous course of apprentices, that the question is already agitated among employers whether the trouble and perplexity of boys at the present day, do not overbalance all the value of their services. These things ought not so to be, and it need not be thus. Let our young friends reflect on what we have said, and each ask himself if all and more is not true; and let him resolve at once that it shall be no longer true of them. We beseech you be faithful and respectful to those under whose charge and guardianship you have been placed, for by so doing you will not only secure the confidence and respect of all around you, but it will prepare you for a course of faithfulness to yourselves in after life, and place within your reach, important advantages when you come to act for yourself.

SEVEN WHITE MEN BURNED BY INDIANS.

A correspondent of the Sacramento Union, writing from Virginia City, confirms the recent tidings of seven white men having been burned to death by Indians in the Washoe region. It appears that these victims formed the party of Norman H. Canfield, of Butte county, which was out prospecting when the war between the whites and Indians at Williams' Ranch broke out, and were not heard of afterwards. The correspondent thus tells the story: "Among the volunteers in the late Indian expedition under Colonel Hays, were two very intimate friends of Mr. Canfield, who used every effort to ascertain the fate of his party; but though the form and features of all the discovered dead were very carefully scrutinized, none were recognized as bearing any resemblance to him or his known companions. A few days after the volunteers were withdrawn from Pyramid Lake, the regulars being then stationed there, some of the latter discovered, among the cotton woods below where the Indian village had stood, and near the place where the Truckee empties into the Lake, tied to as many trees, the bodies, or charred remains, of seven men who had been burned to death. "Two or three had been fastened to the trees with log chains and the flesh had been entirely burned from them; the others had been tied with raw hides; and the upper portions of their bodies bore traces of identification, particularly that of Canfield, who was a robust and powerful man, remarkable in form and feature. His lower limbs and lower part of his frame had been consumed, with the evident design to protract susceptibility to pain, till the bones were charred; but the upper part of the chest, the arms and shoulders and the head were entire—even the grim military whiskers worn by the victim were unscathed. Further description and details have also been furnished, but the revolting hideousness of the picture forbids elaboration. Suffice it, that the evidence leaves to the friends of Mr. Canfield and his companions no possibility of doubt as to his identity, and the horrible process of his and their deaths. "The remains of the victims of this terrible deed were all carefully interred in one grave, beneath a large buttonwood tree, near the spot on which they died, by the soldiers under Capt. Stewart. Whether they were made the bloody offering to the demon of war, or the formal preparation of the Pah-Utians to attack the whites, or were doomed to avenge the slain of the tribe who subsequently fell in battle, will most probably forever remain a mystery. They died—died the most terrible of all deaths which it is possible for the imagination to conceive. Canfield was from Cambridge, Washington county, New York, where his family resided when he came to California, in 1849. He was about 33 years of age at the time of his death.

FATAL FIRE.

On Friday evening a week, the dwelling house of Mr. John Marksteller near Kemmer's Saw Mill, in Upper Tollenansing, was destroyed by fire. A little boy aged ten years, perished in the flames. The child had been left to take care of the house during the temporary absence of Mr. and Mrs. Marksteller. It is not known how the fire originated. Mr. Marksteller lost everything. A horse in the adjoining premises was also consumed.—Carbon Democrat.

AN IRISHMAN.

An Irishman, travelling on one of the railroads the other day, got out of the cars for refreshments at a way station, and unfortunately the bell rang and the train was off before he had finished his pie and coffee. "Hould on!" cried Pat, and he ran like a madman after the cars, "hould on, ye murthering old stame ignine—ye've got a passenger aboard that is left behind!"

A LITTLE FELLOW.

Four years old, the other day nonplussed his mother by making the following inquiry:—"Mother, if a man is a Mister, ain't a woman a Mistery?"

THE MILITARY SQUAD.

An editor says—"On our outside will be found some fine suggestions for raising penches." We suppose that on his inside may be found the penches themselves.

THE OLD FOGY.

The old fogy who poked his head from behind the times, had it knocked soundly by a "passing event."

THE MILITARY SQUAD.

The Milkaukie Sentinel says there are now about a thousand orphans in that city, rendered so by the Lady Elgin calamity. Many of these children are thrown upon the charity of the community.

THE JOKE OF THE OIL REGIONS.

The following story is current in Titusville. In a neighborhood on the creek level and labored a son of Vulcan, who with his limited means, had barely enough to secure a small piece of land and to obtain a scanty living for his rising family. The ideas of the children had been taught to shoot but little in any direction towards knowledge and refinement, and he little expected to be anything else but the village blacksmith. But when the oil fever broke out, learning the success of his neighbors in finding oil, he thought that he might while away his spare hours in drilling a hole upon his own homestead lot; and having tools convenient, he went to work, and, after a few weeks of patient industry, was successful in obtaining a good show of oil. It was soon noised about the village, and the blacksmith was somebody at once. He had a daughter, almost unnoticed and unknown, but who now became more an object of interest to the few young men in that small community. It at once became a question how to break the ice of former indifference, and to secure a favorable acquaintance with this heiress of the oil well. For a while the natural timidity of the boys kept them aloof; but at last one of the boldest and best-favored among them determined to try his luck, and on Sunday evening, attired in his best, resolutely marched forward and offered to escort the damsel home, imagine his chagrin when she turning upon him a look of lofty independence that would have done credit to a Broadway belle, replied in language more severe than chaste: "Nonsense! you can't come that! Dad has struck ile!"

IT LEAKS.

"A friend," says an exchange, "returning from the depot a few days since, with a bottle of freshly imported Maine Law, saw a young lady whom he must inevitably join. So putting the bottle under his arm, he softly walked alongside. 'Well,' said the young lady, after disposing of health and weather, 'what is that under your arm, from which she discovered a dark fluid dropping. 'O nothing but a coat the tailor has been mending for me.' 'Oh, it's a coat, is it? Well, you'd better carry it back and get him to sew up one hole more—it leaks.'"

A HUMANE WOMAN.

While Osman Beg, the commander at Hasebiya, betrayed the Christians, and refused to protect them, a Druse woman, a widow belonging to one of the chief families of the country, sent for all the Protestants to come to her place, where they found shelter. The Druses are said to have acted much more humanely than the Mohammedans.
