THE NEW-MOWN HAY.

BY PARK BENJAMIN.

Talk not to me of Southern bowers, Or odors breathed from tropic flowers. Or spices from the East; But of those sweets that freely flow When June's fond breeze stir the low Grass, heaped along the plain.

COLUMBIA DEMOCRAT.

EDITED BY LEVI L. TATE, PROPRIETOR. BLOOMSBURG, PA. SATURDAY MORNING, JULY 27, 1861.

The National Intelligencer has a good article on "the present status of the slavery question," which we publish; and we desire to call attention to the significant fact that all the announcements over which the Intelligencer congratulates itself have been made by Democratic generals.

At the commencement of the Revolution the necessity for a standard, by which the American troops could recognize each other at a distance became apparent. On the 18th of July, 1775, Gen. Putnam unfurled a flag on Prospect Hill, in the presence of a large number of troops, which bore on one side the motto, "Qui transtulit, sustinet" (He who brought us over will sustain us), and on the other, "An appeal to Heaven."

As early as 1754, before the colonies became united, a very popular standard bore the representation of a rattlesnake, divided into thirteen parts, each bearing the initials of a colony, and underneath the motto, "Join or die." When the Union took place, the parts were united.

Resolved, That it is the duty of the Government to suspend the prosecution of the war.

Resolved, That it is no part of the object of the present war against the rebellious States to interfere with the institution of slavery.

Resolved, That the colors of the stripes indicated defiance to oppression and purity, symbolized respectively by the red and white.

In 1777 Congress appointed a committee to design a national flag, and on the 14th of June a resolution was passed "that the flag of the United States be thirteen stripes, alternate red and white; that the union be thirteen stars, white, in a blue field, representing a new constellation."

In 1794, by an act of Congress, the number of stripes and stars were increased respectively to fifteen, and this was the flag used during the war of 1812.

In 1818, the flag was again altered, and a return was made to the thirteen stripes, and, by the plan proposed, a star was to be added on the 4th of July following the admission of each state.

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the fourth day of July next the flag of the United States be thirteen horizontal stripes, alternate red and white; that the union be twenty stars, white, in a blue field.

Present Status of the Slavery Question. It is known to all that the secession movement professed to take its origin and motive in a desire to protect the institution of slavery from the apprehended hostility of the Federal Government in the hands of the Republican party.
