Army Correspondence.

CAMP NEAR BELLE PLAINS, Va., Jan. 15, 1863. Col. JOHN G. FRIEZE, My Dear Sir— There has been no important movement in the Army of the Potomac, calling for special mention, since my last letter. The troops generally have gone into winter quarters, although they have no direct orders to do so. It has become characteristic to make themselves comfortable, if only for a short time. Opinions are divided as to the probability of a move from this place. All the roads leading to and from the different landings are being destroyed, which is the only plan of making them impassable in this city of war. One day's rain will prevent important military movements.

It is not probable that we will be moved to the Peninsula at the present, because the same reasons that retarded our movements and held us here before, exist at this season more than any other. Besides, our operations have been ordered further south. I do not think another serious attempt will be made against Fredericksburg, if with a complete and confident army we could carry those fortifications. How can we expect to do so when our army is to a certain extent, disheartened; when the enemy have improved and strengthened their works, made their positions along the banks of the river, and improved whatever was defective in their former positions? It was madness, mental madness, to attack them in their position there, and what will it be now?

But, allowing these formidable works to be taken, we have not red upon our difficulties. Every ridge would be a Fredericksburg; every drop of water, and river, and stream, would be a point of defense, and we should reach the Chickahominy again, and again be at the battles of the Peninsula. And to be there, our army, their advantages of position, their superior supplies, and their apparent omnipotence, every man would have to overcome, and, surrounded at the disadvantages of a winter campaign.

To increase our difficulties, we cannot remember. In the spring of the nine months ago, and twenty regiments of New York troops, who enlisted for two years. Thereby to offer two years' service, but I am not positive. This is as only the fragments of the three years' regiments, which are so sadly reduced as to be almost ineffective. From these facts you can draw your own inferences. From the beginning, I have been hopeful, and did all in my power to keep others so; but a deep gloom has settled upon the army. From every side, day after day, comes tidings of disaster and death. The men for over six months, have been unpaid. To add to their discontent, a proclamation has been issued, freeing millions of blacks, placing them in the army and many on the same footing as white men; notwithstanding the protests of the latter, and the disgust of the soldier for the Negro. Two weeks have gone by since that proclamation was issued, and as a war measure, it has not had the least effect upon our cause, other than to increase our discontent.

My duties requiring it, I have been in almost every corps and Division of the Army of the Potomac, and have found both officers and men opposed to the present policy of the Administration. I have yet to find one man in favor of the Proclamation. Hundreds of officers are resigning, and numbers of others would do so could they get an honorable discharge. Every officer of a certain rank, and every man in his resignation, and the Government refused to accept them.

McClellan, as ever, is the army's idol. The least rumor of his reinstatement produces an intense enthusiasm among the men. It may not be generally known that on his removal, one entire Corps stacked their arms, and the rest of the army were ordered under arms to preserve order. Fortunately the tumult was quieted without blood shed. The President I sincerely believe, always has been, and is now, his friend; and his removal was only to satisfy Halleck, Stanton and Chase. Officers who so strenuously demand his removal, I wish to ask, what have we gained? Above all, we are only the views of an individual whose means of information are not beyond those of the faintest private in the army. We doubt but thinking animals, we cannot refrain from drawing certain conclusions from what we see. My sole object is to place before the people of my country, the state of things as I see them. My judgment may be wrong, but my intentions are correct. No one wishes more ardently to see the prospect brightened—and peace restored throughout the land, than Yours-ARFILLERIST.
