MULES VALUABLE FOR FARM WORK.

If any body wishes the mule for a sad die least, he is welcome to his choice, and he will have good company and good ex- ample before him. In Persia, Syria, Spain, Italy, and indeed in nearly all the tropical countries, these animals are often used for riding. For rough, moun- tainous regions, they are invaluable, being so shure-footed. By a little training, too, they can be brought into a very agreeable gait. A foreign writer says: "In Bag- dad, most of the learned and holy pro- fessions prefer the ass, as do all ladies." They are of a peculiar breed, and often fifty pounds sterling, ($250.) The favor- ite color is spotted white; they are mag- nificently caparisoned, and have their nostrils slit, which is said to make them long winded; Surely, their wind is long enough when they bray! The bray is not much admired, generally, but the author or a scarce tract on the nobleness of the ass, (1895,) after giving us all its sweet tones, concludes by declaring that the continued braying of five or six asses forms a melodious kind of music, "a song of world without end."

But it is with mules, as draft animals, that we have now especially to do. They are sometimes from fourteen to sixteen hands high. They are stronger, sure footed, and more durable than common horses. They are so fitted to comparative- ly few diseases. The expense of shoeing them is slight. They will live and thrive upon one-third less than horses, and eat contentedly the cheapest and coarsest kinds of food. Yet, it is a little remarkable that the ass is quite fastid- ious about his drink, preferring only per- fectly pure water. Hence the meaning of a passage in an ancient classic; "Ther- efore, would that the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it."

Much has been said about the obstinacy, stupidity, and viciousness of the mule.— Put whether these alleged vices are not owing chiefly to the ill usage he gets, is perhaps an open question. Mules are seldom known to die, or to become old, we never yet met with one called much over ten years of age! At least their age is seldom thought of in purchasing; for they are serviceable for thirty years or more. We are glad to see that they are being more and more used for farm work.
