

PLANTING CUTTINGS.

We are constantly hearing people say they have no luck in making grape or other cuttings grow-just as if "luck" had anything to do with it. They fail in not giving due attention to the matter; in other words, the cause is neglect and indifferent. The old addage should never be forgotten, apply it wheresoever we may -"A thing that is worth doing at all is worth doing well."

There should be properly three eyes to every cutting then dig a trench-set the cuttings at an angle of 45 degrees, at least six inches apart, and so that the upper eye shall be an inch above the ground-and press the earth around the wood firmly with the toot. It is well to mulch them with grass or straw, and if need be water them occasionally in the driest weather.

Some varieties of the grape are propogated much more freely than others .-For instance the Concord Maxatawny, Isabelly, Hartford Prolific, Telegraph, Clinton, Cassidaa, &c. &c., take root read ily; while the Delaware and Diana are difficulty to propogate in open culture unless great care is paid to them, and a good portion of wood is used.

We believe all the raspberry family can be propogated in the same way. We have now fifty growing under glass, cuttings of the Cattawissa, many of them in

The mulberry can be grown in the same way. We all know how easily currants and gooseberries. We have had both the Dri latter to bear the year after setting out .-Currants and gooseberries should be set out just where they are wished to stand permanently. If you prefer a tree, cut out all the eyes beneath the surface of the ground; if a bush, let the eyes remain. These cuttings ought to be planted at least eight inches deep, and the earth pressed firmly around them.

A large proportion of flourishing shrubs can also be propogated by cuttings-and this should be known by all who have "luck" in multiplying their stock in this
