

JUNE. BY WM. ROSS WALLACE.

Aye, thou art here, upon the world, And for the spirit not too seon, With all the broad, bright opulence, O dear, delicious June !

How beautiful thy rosy feet ! How deep and rich and bright Within thy delicate white hands The golden cups of Light !

I see the minstrels of the wood On quivering wing lean o'er their brink And with a swooning extasy, Together sing and drink.

The leaves in mystic wave; The rills in mystic song reply ; The very clouds on silver wings Make clearer still the sky.

How calm the scal And should it n Stir with a storm the universe. We'd wonder as if angles hurled From you blue heaven a curse.

O let me leave in towns my care ! O lat me lie beside some stream, And from those golden cups of light Drink many a joyous beam !

O come, O come thou Soul of Joy, With summer's broad green flag unfurl'd For aught but Joy were blasphemy In such a glowing world !

THINNING FRUIT TO INCREARE ITS FLAVOR.

A very great proportion of the fruit that reaches our market, is not only infe. rior in size, but decidedly inferior in flavor and in many cases, almost insipid. The general impression is, that these are natural results, and that no effort of the cultivator will remedy them. Of this we are not so certain. Extremely unfavorable seasons may affect the flavor as well as the size of the fruit. Thus, a wet and cloudy season invaribly produces greatly increased acidity in the small fruity, and is particularly noticeable in the peach .---But in good season the flavor of a fruit may readily be preserved if the proper means are restored to for the attainment of this object. A writer in the Cottage Gardener in a very sensible article on this subject, contends that "a clever man can maturity five or six dozen of fruit when only three dozen should have been permitted to ripen the flavor will be decided-A favorite plum tree in 1861, bore but a thin crop of fruit, which was all preserved. Their aroma when being made into

FILL THE MISSING HILLS.

A vacant hill will be found here and there in the cornfield, at the first hoeing. Unless many of them occur together, they are quite likely to be passed by as of little account, but it is attention to small matters that marks the difference between TO YOUNC MENS carefulness and neglect, and not unfrefrequently here is the turning p oint be-tween thrift and what is called bad luck. In most sections it will pay to replant missing hills with corn at the first weed-ing. In a favorable season it will come to maturity. Or pumpkin seed may be put in, which wilt yield choice morsels for animals next Autumn. It would be bet-ter to plant and cultivave these spots even without return, than to leave them to be occupied by weeds which will be sure to by addressing, take possession, and ripan seed for a succession of troublesome crops.
