OBITUARY.

The autumn winds had just began To sigh among the trees Autumnal colors just began To change the verdant leaves. The beauteous flowers of summer. Hed just began to fade, When up there in the old church-yard, Sweet Nona's grave was made I saw her in the happy days Of childhood young and gay Around the family circle With little brothers play. I saw her with her childish glee The babie's cares beguile ; And from their childish grief and care Her little brothers wile

The fond mother's eyes grew brighter. Watching her darling child. And upon their only daughter

The father kindly smiled And I watched her winning beauty, Her loveliness of mich, Amid that family circle

Angelic, did she seem. 1 saw her when in her sickness, When on her bed of death. Leaning on her mother's bosom

Gasping for every breath. I saw her cold and lifeless form Within her coffin laid. A smile of heavenly beauty then O'er her fair features played. Then they took that little coffin

Hid it beneath the ground, And up in the old grave-yard then Heaped little Nona's mound. O how I wondered then that death

In such a world as ours Would leave the bristling thorns stand, And pluck our fairest flowers:

But 'tis thus it often hannens. God's works are for the best, He takes our idols from our arms Our dearest to His rest.

And I visited the household Where Nona used to dwell,

As I looked upon the circle That loved their Nona well. There was something in the stillness

Whispered our darling's gone, I looked and autid the circle. Missed little Nona's form.

""Tis lonesome here," the mother said. And heaved a tittle sigh ; "Tis lonesome here," the mother sobbad Since Nona had to die."

Fend mother dry those bitter tears, Why weep for Nona's sake ? For up in that bright land above Your Nona, God did take.

Let little ones come unto me Forbid them not. He cried ; And happy up in Heaven now Is Nona by His side.
