Make this Campaign the Last.

We are yet in the beginning of this campaign, and already we count the dead by thousands and the wounded by tens of thousands.

If we estimate the Confederate loss as equal to ours, says the New York News, there is the appalling list of fifty thousand human beings killed or disabled at the very threshold of the campaign.

It may be gratifying to our national vanity that we have troops who will move without faltering into the jaws of death, and who will stand to be shot down by musketry and torn by cannon shot.

Whatever may be the military result of this campaign, so terribly inaugurated, the blood that has been shed, the blood that will be shed must not appear in vain against the prolongation of this internal war.

THE WAR.

Our connected account of the Virginia Campaign closed last week with the reports contained in the news papers up to Thursday evening.

By the papers of Friday we learn that Grant has swung his western flank back until it rested on the Ny, about four miles south of Chancellorsville.

We have at length received some details of Gen. Butler's late movement on the James river. Our readers will remember that some time since he constructed a line of earthworks across the narrow neck between the lower Appomattox and James river.

At daylight on Monday the Confederates began a furious cannonade. They then attacked Smith's corps. A column succeeded in getting between Heckman and the James river. They attacked his rear and doubled his brigade back upon the next day.

At this moment Butler learned that a force of five Confederate regiments has attacked a rear guard of negro troops, whom he had left near Petersburg, and broke it up.

There are large numbers of guerrillas in Grant's rear. Three hundred of them are reported in one body near Falls Church, fifteen miles from Washington.

General Grant, it appears, has again withdrawn his line. On Tuesday evening his army presented a southwestern front along the Ny, the western flank being four miles north of Spotsylvania.

Availing themselves of this position of his troops, the Confederate on Thursday sent a flanking party around his north flank and captured the turnpike road leading from Spotsylvania to Fredericksburg.

General Butler on Tuesday last was encamped on the narrow neck of land at Bermuda Hundred, near the mouth of the Appomattox. The enemy having reconstructed the railroad between Petersburg and Richmond, on Wednesday night last a force was sent out by Butler to cut it, but the enemy were found in great strength and the force returned without reaching the railroad.

that he had been fighting all day, the enemy endeavoring to close in on our lines. The Confederate General Walker is said to be captured. As yet no result of the fighting is announced and nothing is known of what occurred after Friday evening.

It appears that on Wednesday last, General Grant gave up the idea of capturing Spotsylvania by direct attacks and determine to go around it. He accordingly withdrew his army towards Fredericksburg, and on Wednesday night his front presented a western face.

The Confederates, divining Grant's intentions, began to move eastward on Friday about noon. They abandoned Spotsylvania, and hastened toward Bowling Green, near the railroad, eight miles south of Guiney's.
