THE Presidential contest just closed consists the political destinies of the peo-ple of the United States, during another term of years, to the control of President Lincoln of the North, and Jefferson Davis at the South.

The Democratic party, always indentified with the prosperity, growth, and glory of the resublic, may point with honest pride to its record in this great contest. against an administration wielding the nost enormous power of patronage and ver presessed by any government, and reinforced alike by the unbounded fears of many patriots and the sympathies of all traitors, the Democratic party fought the battle of 1864 ti rmly and learlessly to the small majority of popular votes by which thas been so deteated is demonstrably less than the number of persons openly and officially dependent upon the andministration as office holders or contractors in the various departments of the public ser continues to be administered by men who not only violate its excess pravisions, but invade also those personal and civil rights to high and sacred that Constitutions cannot confer but only guarantee them, and which laws are made to vindicate and goard. The Purse is still borne by men who in four years have heaped upon us and the unborn generations of our children a tiebt almost as buge as theret England, acquired through centuries, and whose policy of a bloated paper corrency doubles upon us the present burden of this giganindebtedness. The Sword is still wielded by those who see treason in an olive branch, and who make victories won by our gallant armies and flee;s fruitless, since they open no path to the triumphs of peace

Demograts must await events They can now only watch for the public calmy, and exert all the power of a great minority to prevent Mr. Lincoln's adminis tration from drifting, for the sake of abolitton, into a disunion peace.

"They also serve who only stand and

The principles of the Democratic party are just, and will yet prevail, for they are the laws of the progress of the human race. They are the principles which have emerged from every revolution of the Anglo-Saxon race with increased guarantees and strentgh. The coming four years are to be years of calamity But now they who sowed the winds are to be reapers of the whirewind. The Democratic party is short, of power, but it is divested of all responsibility. When the hour of sore distress comes, the people, instead of cursing the Democratic party, will to it for relief, and ching to it for deliverance.
