AGRICULTURAL.

WINTER.

He comes! The tardy winter comes!
I hear his footstep through the nights!
I hear his vanguard from the heights
March through the pines with muffled drums!

His naked feet are on the mead,
The grass blades stiffen in his path,
No flow'ret child on earth he hath!
No pity for her tender seed!

The bare oaks shudder at his breath;
A moment by the stream he stays—
His melody is mute! A glaze
Creeps o'er its dimples, as of death!

From fettered stream and blackened moor,
The city's walls he silent nears;
The mansion of the rich he fears;
He storms the cabins of the poor!

The curtained couch, the glowing hearth,
The frost-thinned Graybeard's power defy;
He carves as he hurries by—
And strikes the beggar, dead, to earth!

For ever gleaming hail he spares,
A hundred heartless bosoms hold
Heart pitiless, crisp with ice and cold,
Watched by a hundred grim Despairs!

The forests grow by His command
Who saith: "He lendeth to the Lord
Who giveth to the poor!" Your hoard
Is His! Ye stewards of the land!

Here is your mission! Ye who feed
Your lavish fires! Not far,
But at your doors, your heathen are!
God's poor—your creditors—take heed.

The path is long to Pagan shores:
Their skies are sunny; God o'er all!
The winter's deadly harvest fall
Around you! Deaf your Master's stores!

BARLEY AND RYE FOR HORSES.

A correspondent of the "Country Gentleman" writes as follows:

"My first experience in feeding barley to horses was in California, where there was no other grain raised for feed at the time I was there. All our horses were fed on it for two years without any change and never got tired of it, always thriving and looking remarkably fine for the amount of labor they performed. This induced me to raise it to feed after my return from that country and I have learned to esteem it higher than any other grain (when ground) for horses. It is too hard to feed in the grain. It is less liable to founder than corn, wheat or rye yet contains but very little less nutriment than either of those grains. I have raised a great many colts and have made the breeding of trotting horses a study, and in all my experience I have found nothing equal to barley meal to make a mare give milk. I have found it no disadvantage to a mare getting with foal and not any while she was so. Oats are a better feed for colts from weaning time until they go to work.

"Rye is a dangerous grain to feed alone; it is more liable to founder than any other grain; but to mix with shorts, or to grind with oats and feed with cut hay or straw, it makes an excellent feed for horses."

OLD FRUIT TREES RENOVATED.

There were old apple trees in profusion with nearly a hundred pear trees of superior vigorous growth, but utterly neglected and reported as yielding small crops of indifferent fruit. The out-going seller of the farm had intended to cut them down. He knew the market value of pickles, but the pear culture was a sealed book. The buyer educated in a different school, believed that there was yet a money value in these trees, and that they could be resuscitated. We stood among them and debated the question. He thought that here was a foundation to begin upon and that an investment of money in reviving them would yield a far quicker return than in waiting for the product of a new-planted orchard. Among other facts and experience, reference was made to the memorable account recorded in this journal, nearly twenty years ago, of the complete renovation of two outcast pear trees. Like all these, they had once borne excellent crops of fruit, but for several years had only produced worthless specimens. The owner was told that the trees—for there were several in like condition—had exhausted the proper element in the soil and that it must be re introduced by artificial means. That autumn he carried out the suggestion and scraped off all the rough outer bark from two trees then coated them with soft soap cut, about one-third of all the poorest branches and shortened the head of the trees one-third by cutting back the principle limbs paring the wounds and covering them with the shellac solution. The preparation being made a trench was dug around each tree, three feet from the same, four feet wide and twenty inches deep, the soil being carted away. In making this trench, about a third of the roots were cut away. The trench was then filled with soil from a good pasture field, there being added at the time of filling two bushels of refuse scorize from a blacksmith's forge, two of well broken charcoal, and two pounds of pulverized potash. All these were thoroughly intermingled after the trench had been filled, by frequent overturnings with the spade. The result of this cheap and simple operation was manifest the following summer. The luxuriance and vigor of the foliage were surprising for the newly formed roots were wandering into fresh and wholesome pasture. The next there was a moderate bloom, but every blossom produced fruit. The third year there was a fine crop, the two trees producing six bushels of suberb fruit. It was convincing evidence that the failure of the old established pear trees to produce good crops is owing to a want of proper nutriment in the soil, and that instead of being cut down when they cease to bear they should be taken in hand and renovated.
