THE CONTESTED FLECTION.

We have been permitted to copy from the notes of testimony of the Hon. Jno. Prisbin, taken at Danville in the late investigation, for publication, the following evidence: We shall continue to do so, from time to time, that our readers may understand the nature of the gross frauds perpetrated at the Danville poll in October last.

So far as we are able to form an opinion

So far as we are able to form an opinion so tar as we are note to the an opinion there never has been for the honor of the county in which we live, an instance of such corruption.—It is indeed startling and the beginning of what, can hardly be anticipad in its end.

We shudder at the thought in recording the testimony—its influences are sad to ontemplate. But read, READ the testimony contemplate. But read, READ the testimony democrats of Pennsylvania!

"The contestant also gives in evidence the following certified copies of the declarations of intentions of the persons therein named to become citizeus of the United States, containing their places of residence and of what kingdom they are subjects and the date of the filing of the same, which appears as certified by the Prohonotary of Montour county and under the seal of the bourt viz:

American citizens, are permitted to approach the polls and cast their votes for whom? Let sche answer—if you—you fron Lords canno! That one of them at least who professes to be bound and governed by a higher law than the moral code, should at least have learned that the commission of crime is not dictated by the holy creed he professes to adopt. We are told further that not one of the above persons obeyed the commissioners Subpener's and refused to testify, and why? Because the guilty conscience seared and hissed at the idea of appearing before a judicial officer.

We are informed there was one exception—that was Felix MoGram, and this is the only one. And is it in this way that men are to be cheated and defrauded out of their political rights and the democratic party prostrated? "No fuct proved" says the federal wires—ho the? "No fuct." We think there are twenty facts above referred too that may well make men tremble in their boots! "No fuct." Pray what may be regarded as fucts under the Danville rule of construction? We will in our next flumber lay before our reader some other extracts from the testimony—which although they may not be "fucts" in our opinion will be such stumbling blocks as never before lay in the political path—no never!

Sacred to the Memory of the Departed.

What is more certain than death? And how prone mankind to view it in the distance.

Scarcely a fortnight has elapsed, since Charles, the companion of my youth, the friend of maturer years, in the full meridian of manlicod and usefulness; has been cut down like the grass of the field. Oue month since, and we met with the social grasp, and the usual compliments of bosom friends.—Then for the last time his manly voice fell, like music upon my ear. Very soon the doleful intelligence greets me, that CHARLES BODINE is deat. Must I believe it? Has that spacious brow, so abundantly stored with uttelligence, been forever dimmed?—that honest heart ceased its pulsations? Ah! its true. A kind husband, a doing parent; an affectionate brother and a dutiful son has fallen.

His voice will no longer be heard; That intelligent mind has left all behind, And gone to the far distant world.

The wife of his youth, how deleful the trut is left, in bereavement to mourn The loss of a friend, to life's latter end; For a husband, a falher is gone.

May God give relief to the widow in grief, And be to the orphan a friend; To the father give cheer tor one that was dear Ven the loss of a dutiful son.

To sisters and brothers, and even to others,
Who prize the departed as I;
May the loss that we dole be gain to his soul,
Though tears flow, like rain, with a sigh.

And life! What is life, but a sorrowful strife?
And what is an age but a span?
We laugh and we ory and to-morrow we die,
For such is the lot of all men.
