Mr. Brooks by any diligent and systematic farmer .-The Hon-John Lowell said 18 per cent. All this may be done by farming intelligently. He had wondered that farmers generally could get along so well as they actually do in their careless mode of farming. Poor himself, he had restored him. He repeated his pleasure on hearing the numerous, statements of the profits that may be made in this business. One more consideration should have much weight. It had been truly stated by his venerable friend from Frantingham, (Maj. Wheeler,) that this business naturally leads the mind to the to the Roler of the Universe, to whom farmers feel obliged to look for a blessing on their labors. No occupation so directly leads WARE of every description, which he the mind to reflection on the works will sell at moderate prices—all warranted of crestion.
