AN ARABIAN LEGEND OF CHARITY. The following story is told by the A- rabs respecting Mount Moriah, the place- where the temple of Jerusalem formerly stood, and where the mosque of Ognar now stands. It is narrated in a book just- published by the Rev. Moses Margoliouth': "This site was formerly a plougled field, possessed in common by two broth- ers. One was married and had severat children; the other was a bachelor; no- vertheless, they lived together in perfect concord, cultivating the patrimony they jointly inherited from their father. Har- vest-time arrived. The brothers wisped their sheaves, and apportioned them into two equal heaps, which they left in the field. During the night a happy thought occurred to the unmarried brother : he said to himsell, "My brother has a wife and children to support; is it, then, just that my portion of the havest should e- qual his ?" On that he arose, and took down from his heap several sheaves, which he added to his brother's. This was doue with as much modesty as if he had been observing caution, while doing a bad ac- tion. His motive was that his fraternal offering should not be refused. The oth- er brother awake the same night, and said to his wife t "My brother lives alone, and without company; he has no one to as- sist him in his labor, or to recompense him for his fatigues; whilst God has gven me a wile and children. It is not right that we ahould take from the field so many aheaves as he, since we have alreader
