STAR AND BANNER.

January 1, 1853.

Good MORNING, friends-I wish you happy cheer On this the dawning of a new-born year, And feel rejoiced to think that you and I Have lived to see another year roll by.

· 花花 松

Full many a joy you've felt since last we met-And sorrows, too, which all would fain forget; Yet joy and sorrow form life's varied chain-Thus has it been, and thus 'twill be again. From ills in life none ever were secure, Fach has his share and must that share endure-Though, if our path be intricate and rough, HOPE nerves the arm to meet each sad rebuff. Then let us hope good Fortune has in store Abundant sweets to "dump" at every door; But should misfortune throw you on your back, Get up again and take another tack!

The harvest o'er, we, for the abundance given, Would raise our voice in gratitude to Heaven, And praise the Giver for the boundless store That fills our land to its remotest shore. While others, far less fortunate than we, Drag out their days in want and penury, To us has it in kindest love been given To share the choicest, richest gifts of Heaven. Famine, haggard and gaunt, is nowhere seen, Or War's red front, or Power with threat'ning mien-No Despot here, to rule with iron rod, Or claim the homage due alone to God.

But, oh I how sad the universal wail Breaks o'er this scene, enshrouding hill and dale, In deepest gloom that sorrow can convey-

The nation mourns a Webster and a Clay ! r"Long shall we seek their likeness-long in vain. And turn to all of them that may remain. Sighing that nature formed but two such men And broke the die in moulding only them !"

As to the Election-tis best least said; The Soup's upset-and all the Coons have fled To that new clime they lately did diskiver Hard by the famous sources of Salt-River! The Loco crew, you know, were there before us, With Cass and Butler, Marcy, Buck, and Douglass; They've all come back and placed us in a fix, But courage, boys-just wait till fifty-six.

Another theme-on which my thoughts are mainly be My money's gone! Yes, every copper spent! I've reamed the streets to serve you with the news, And hope the Devil's worthy of his dues! Now don't be shocked-I would be wondrous civil. Yet, once a year 'tis well to gerve the "Devil." There're many friends, I've often heard it said, Who with his Grace drive an extensive trade-Though when the tricks and trades of life are past, Still live in hope of cheating him at last. All may be saved, when time shall cease to roll, Except the miser, who has got no soul. I hope I'm honest-ne'er a friend to pelf-And modest, too, when speaking of myself; Too much of either does not suit the times. 'Tis wondrous strange how fashion changes crimes! Let this console you, whatso'ere your lot. Contentment is true wealth-forget it not: And may the Gods propitions o'er you wake And bless your homes for Carrier Peter's sake !
