A FREE LYRIC.

The name of Mrs. Norton

has not been as familiar to the literary world of late years as it deserves. It is true she has written less than she was accustomed to produce in the early portion of her career, but whatever comes from her pen is always worthy of reproduction, as she is an artist of the highest and purest quality. Her recent poems have more vigor and directness than her first works, but amongst the best of them

all we are inclined to rank the following,

On the brow of that Scandinavian girl

Than his rich crown of jewels and gold!

And his bow of the Isles lay dying!

Thirty he saddled with speed

(Hurry!)

Each one mounting a gallant steed

Which he kept for battle and days of need—

(Oh! ride as though you were flying!)

Spurs were struck in the foaming bank—

Whirlwinds whirled, and the sun was blurred—

But ere he would, the King rode first

For his rose of the Isles lay dying!

His bow was broken, one by one,

(Hurry!)

They had fainter, and faltered, and homeward gone;

His little fair page now follows alone—

For strength and for courage true!

The King looked back at that faithful child

Who was the face that answered
