Pheasants and Quail Also Perish From Hunger

Special to The Telegraph

Waynesboro, Pa., Feb. 28.—Tuesday light and Wednesday morning were the coldest days experienced in this section for two years or more. The thermometer in Waynesboro registered as low as 13 degrees below zero. The following places report the temperature: Ringgold, 18 below; Shady Grove, 10 below; Good's Siding, 20 below; Mount Alto, 20 below; Chambersburg, 18 below; Midvale, 21; Highfield, 22 below; Pen Mar, 20 below; Rouzerville, 16 below;

Livestock suffered much. Farmers in the outlying districts were compelled to drive their cattle and hogs into the stalls of their bank barns to shield the animals from the piercing cold.

In the Blue Ridge Mountains, in the relicinity of Buena Vista Springs Hotel and Pen Mar, rabbits and birds have succumbed to the continuous cold weather. The ground in the mountain has been covered with a coating of ice and snow several inches deep almost continuously since New Year's day, and the rabbits, partridges and pheasants have been able to secure but little food and no water and, in sonsequence, many rabbits have been found frozen to death beneath small bushes, while whole colveys of partridges have been found frozen in a lease, while whole colveys of partridges have been found frozen in a lease, as a single from the cold and have been found frozen in a lease, as a stough they were not afraid the animals having died from the cold and have been found frozen in a lease of the found frozen in the barn yard of farmers eating the provent when the farmer or any of his hired help approach while they are feeding, they bound over the fence and scurry into the mountains.
