Electrically Baked Bread Just as Good as Mother Made, Too

[From the Electrical World.]

Through the use of electric power, the largest business in the Rocky mountain region has been built up by one baking firm. Flour is hauled directly from the mills and handled by two electric elevators.

Electric motors are used to drive gravity mixers and sifters as well as to drive the pumps used for taking water from artesian wells.

The pans containing the loaves are then placed in racks and taken to the cooling room to permit the loaves to form their crusts.

Evangelist Stough Gives Fathers Some Hot Shots

Tells Them How They Fail to Be Boys' Heroes

Mt. Carmel, Pa., March 12.—Before an audience of more than 4,000 in the Tabernacle last night the Rev. Dr. Henry Stough, the Illinois evangelist, delivered "Home Makers and Home Breakers."

"God intended that father and mother should be all supreme over their children," and added that the example of good parents was lacking in many homes.

"The boy's father is his hero," he said. "His daddy is the biggest man the little fellow knows anything about. Are you the head of your family? Are you your boy's hero? Then how did you act at home? Did you get up last Sunday morning and run about the house in a pair of old carpet slippers and an old hickory shirt? Perhaps you did not even shave until dinner time.

But you got on your hat and coat and started for the nearest cigar store and bought your devil's bible. Some of you people are ashamed to be seen on the street carrying our old Oxford Bible, but you load up with a lot of Sunday papers with a lot of lurid pictures. This is what some of you have to do on Sundays. It beats all what amuses some of you heroes."

"With stinging sarcasm the evangelist said that since the wives of these men did not have kodaks to show them how they looked, he would do it himself.

He affected a reclining position in a chair, adding bitingly that the only danger of the position lay in the possibility of the brains running to the feet.

"In the meantime," said the evangelist, "mother would be in the back room tying up little pigtails and getting the children ready for Sunday school. The children are rebellious and your wife asks you to speak to show them if you are something about minding their mother and slide a little farther down in the chair, with your cornob pipe hanging out of your mouth."

"Little Johnny comes in sullen. He has combed his hair in front. He has spit on the backing brush and given his shoes one or two swipes. I get big I won't go to Sunday school, but stay at home like daddy does and read the papers." And he means it. It is all because his father is his hero."

The evangelist said that unless the mother is the stronger character of the two, in nine cases out of ten the boy would follow his father and, he continued, "The most pathetic hour that comes to a boy is when he finds that his father is not as good as he thought he was—not his hero."
