MANY EX-MEMBERS WOULD SIT AGAIN

Names of Men Prominent in Last Session Figure on the Primary Nominations

SPEAKER NOT A CANDIDATE

John Scott, Senator Hall, Daniel J. Shern and Taylor North Not Running Now

More men who sat in previous legislatures are candidates for nominations for the general assembly of 1915 than has been the case in any year for election of members of the two houses than usual. In the 2,000 or so names on the big books in which candidates are registered on advance of the primaries at the Department of the Secretary of the Commonwealth are the names of probably more than three-fourths of the members of the last House and of over half of the senators whose terms expire with this year.

With the possible exception of Philadelphia, every county has as candidates one or two or more of the men who sat in its seats last session and in Lackawanna, Lancaster, Luzerne, Northampton and some other counties the whole delegations are seeking re-nomination. In others it happens that the men who contended for election in November, 1912, are candidates again and the men who defeated them are also on the lists. In some counties men who sat in the last House are candidates for senatorial nominations, Blair county furnishing a notable example in this respect.

Just what will be the character of the campaign this year no one can foretell now owing to the strenuous manner in which the primaries are being waged and the general decline of the Bull Moose party strength. Chances are that some of the men who rode into office on the wings of two years ago will be unable to navigate very far this year and industrial or war conditions may work unexpected ways. However, the nomination list shows at least that the next House stands in a fair way to have many experienced men, although Speaker Alter, Chairman S. Taylor North, of the appropriations committee; John R. K. Scott, D. J. Shern, E. Lowry Humes, George A. Baldwin and others who were more or less in the eye and journal of the House and Francis S. McLennan, Auditor General A. W. Powell, J. K. P. Hall and John O. Shertz, prominent figures of the Senate, are not candidates again.

FEARFUL HUMOR COVERED FACE RESINOL CURED

Itchy, Covered With Pimples and Most Unpleasantly, Instantly Relieved
Paterson, N. J., Dec. 9, 1913: 'About a year ago my face began to crack and get scaly in blotches. It soon got worse and my face was all spotted and rough, and it itched me very much at night, and caused me no end of discomfort. After a month or so, pimples and blackheads began to show, first in small numbers and then gradually covering my entire face. It was awful. The pimples were sore and the rash was itchy and my face had a most unsightly appearance. I tried different kinds of soaps, creams and massages and also a strict diet, but I could get no relief. Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment caused me instant relief. By the time another jar of Resinol Ointment and cake of Resinol Soap were gone, I can truthfully say that it was a complete cure. My face had assumed its former color and looks, due to Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment. They are, I think, the best for any skin trouble.' (Signed) Robert Troyano, 269 E. 21st St.
Resinol Soap and Ointment heal eczema and other skin eruptions, stop itching instantly, and are most valuable for pimples, dandruff, sores, burns, boils, etc. For trial size, free, write to Resinol, Dept. 8-R, Baltimore, Md. A few unscrupulous dealers try to sell substitutes for Resinol. Look out for them.—Advertisement.

HOBSON PAYS WARM TRIBUTE TO PRIVATE

House With Glowing Praise of Men Who Fell at Vera Cruz

Special to The Telegraph
Washington, April 23.—A eulogy of the plain private in the American navy that brought forth great applause was delivered in the House by Representative Richmond P. Hobson, of Alabama. Coming as it did right after the action of the House in "justifying" the resident in the use of armed forces against Mexico, Hobson's tribute to the fighting spirit and courage of the plain private in the navy caused a patriotic outburst among members high as swelled by handclapping from the galleries. Such men as Representative Butler, Pennsylvania, and Representative Davis, of Minnesota, who have sons in the navy, were visibly moved as Mr. Hobson with great fervor gave a dramatic recital of the heroic courage ex-

DOES YOUR STOMACH CONTAIN A GLASSFUL OF ACID?

OUT OF 100 DYSPEPTICS HAVE DANGEROUS ACID IN THEIR STOMACHS, WHICH MUST BE NEUTRALIZED IF GOOD HEALTH IS TO BE MAINTAINED
If you held a teaspoonful of hydrochloric acid in your stomach for only second you would not be surprised at burning and inflaming all the tissues, yet an eminent specialist states that 98 out of 100 dyspeptics go about with a glassful or more of this powerful acid in their stomachs, and then wonder what causes the burning and why they suffer the discomfort after meals. To put whole food into an acid stomach only increases the discomfort, because the acid mixes with the fresh food and turns it sour, making a lot more acid. The acid condition causes food fermentation, which irritates, distends and inflames the tender stomach lining, and it is not surprising that specialists say acid stomachs are dangerous. This decidedly dangerous and uncomfortable condition can be overcome either by following a strict diet or, and this is far easier and more quickly effective, by taking a teaspoonful of bisulphated magnesia in a quarter glassful of water after meals to neutralize the acidity. The latter course is much more satisfactory because it corrects the acidity and banishes discomfort without any need for diet.—Advertisement.

hibited by the "plain private" who aided him in the exploit of sinking the Merrimac in Santiago harbor in 1898. Mr. Hobson told how a thousand men responded when Admiral Sampson called for seven volunteers to assist Hobson in sinking the Merrimac as a means of bottling up the Spanish fleet in Santiago harbor. He told how these men obeyed orders to the last as the Merrimac sank in the waters that lay the shores of Cuba, and how at a time when it looked as if the eight men would be executed by the Spaniards for their daring act the "plain private" sent word to their captain that their only wish was that they might have another opportunity to respond to the call of duty.

House Deeply Stirred
Hobson stirred the House as it has not been stirred in a long time. "Gentlemen," exclaimed Hobson, "we have taken great responsibility upon us here in this Congress, but I want to tell you from knowledge that the confidence you have placed in the plain private who represents the plain average American citizen out there at the front when the drum beats, when the flag flies and the thunder is in the air—the confidence you may place in them, and I may add in the officers who command them, will not be misplaced."
Hobson said he had served with the plain private for eighteen years. "I remember well how I was first impressed with the character and spirit of the private," he said. "It was on a cruise. A gale had been blowing for forty-eight hours and the seas running high. Some midshipmen were sent over the masthead. They were all seasick. It was thought it would help them out to give them a little exercise and they were sent over the masthead. They did not think to give them a warning not to come down on the lee side, which you should never do in a gale of wind. You ought to go up on the weather side and come down on the weather side. But the order was given for the midshipmen to go over the masthead and they promptly did so, and half of them had not got over the cross-tree when one of them—a nephew of Admiral Schley, a classmate of mine—fell and struck the top of the yard and went overboard."

All Eager to Risk Lives
"A heavy sea was running. Promptly the lifeboat was called for and the crew responded. They had not been more than half lowered before the sea, which was running very heavy, swamped the boat. It was not believed the boat could live in that sea. They called away the other lifeboat's crew and they went back as cheerfully as though it were a dead calm and they went out in that lifeboat to see if they could save any of those who were overboard. I have seen seamen, the plain seamen, go overboard and try to save a comrade and they promptly did so, and half of them had not got overboard—a superfluity exposing their own lives to save a comrade."

"This was my first introduction to the spirit of the plain private. And I remember, gentlemen, they are nothing but boys. The average age in the fleet that is off the coast of Mexico today is 21 years."
"Perhaps I ought to give another personal tribute to this private. A question came up—a little incident—a little expedition in my day. Being a naval constructor, knowing how to build ships, I naturally knew how to sink ships. The question of sinking ships came up and naturally I wanted to be associated with it. Seven men were wanted, and Admiral Sampson issued a call for seven men. The call was issued from the flagship and more than a thousand responded."
"The main trouble I had from that time to the time we started in was in refusing the personal appeals of men who had been my old shipmates, pleading with me on personal grounds and on all other grounds to let them go in."
"Yes, Poinsett and his comrades make me think of the time when, with those seven men gathered on the deck, we were slowly sinking. Only two top-edges went off. We had ten, but the wiring and the batteries connected with the others had been broken and the ship was crushed before the time came and only two went off. We went down slowly."
All Remained Until the Last
"The original plan was that if the lifeboat would survive we would get away from the ship and get out of it, and the men expected to get away. But the lifeboat was shot away, and I therefore changed my plans entirely, but I did not explain it to them. I can remember these seven men, too. Shell after shell would come in, and with every shell it would look to us as though the next one surely would get us. They would tear and cut everything below and the men would say, 'Now can we be off?' I would say, 'No.' I said, 'No man can move until further orders.' When the boiler went up they said, 'Can we go?' I said, 'No man will move until further orders.'"
"At last the ship gave a lurch, just before she was going down, and heaved as though she would turn over on us, and we heard the gurgling and rushing sound of the whirlpool and they said, 'Can we get off?' and I said, 'No, stay with me' and they stayed with me, gentlemen, every last one of them."
"Now I have another little after-math thought of it. By 11 o'clock that day we were in the Morro. All the men were in one cell—seven men in one dark cell. I knew it was a question of their health and I called upon the commandant to let one of them come to me for instructions about taking care of their health. They sent Surratt in, and after he got his instructions he put his heels together and saluted and said: 'Sir, the men asked me to bring you a message.' It looked as if they were getting ready to execute me. Everything looked that way. There was that one chance to send me a message. What do you suppose that message was?"
"I will not say how long a time we stayed in the water when they were closing in on us with their launches, and how the men thought they would kill us if they caught us. I did not tell them for hours what the orders were, but just told them to stand by me, and you would think if a man got clear of a thing like that he would not want to go into it again. The message they sent to me was this—I remember Surratt, with his heels together, said: 'Sir, the men asked me to tell you that they would go in with you again to-night.'"
