STEELTON MANDAMUS CASE STEELTON FIREMEN Attorney General's Department

Five Companies to Be in Line at Big Harrisburg

Deputy Attorney General Hargest to-day made another move in the automobile license controversy which is designed to assure the trial of the Powell case, on which argument on a motion to quash is to be held to-morrow.

This merning Mr. Hargest went before Judge McCarrell and moved to extend the term and that a special panel of twenty jurors be summoned to appear when wanted within three weeks. This action was taken so that in case the court refused to quash the mandamus and Auditor General Powell demands a jury trial he can be accommodated without loss of time.

To-morrow the Attorney General will ask for judgment against State Treasurer Young because of the verdict against him and against Auditor General Powell because of failure to answer as required by the court. This will be in the second mandamus action and appeals to the Supreme Court till follow.

To-morrow the motion to quash the third action, which is against Powell

School Debt Ruling. — An opinion has been given to Dr. Nathan C. Schaeffer, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, by Jesse E. B. Cunningham, first deputy attorney general, to the effect that in calculating the borrowing capacity of a school district the amount of cash held in the sinking fund for redemption of existing debt may be considered. The case arose in an inquiry from the school district of Sheltenham, where the limit of debt which could be incurred without obtaining assent of electors is $229,411.50. The debt amounted to $210,000 and as there was $21,511.81 in cash in the sinking fund the school authorities wanted to know if it could be used in calculating the net debt.
