"WATCHERS" ARE IN GALA ARRAY

about the polls it was the topic of conversation over and above the tenseness of the battle of the McCormick henchmen to hold Harrisburg for the Little Boss.

"Hold the Home Town"

The McCormick campaign managers had secured the services of more "watchers" than ever known before and each one was infused with the desperation of the situation and told to make his slogan "Hold the home town." Every effort will be made by the army of "watchers" to keep Harrisburg in the McCormick column and similar efforts are being made in Steelton.

The stay-at-home Democratic voter who happens to be enrolled will probably find his door bell pulled out by the roots to-night if he does not go to the polls. "Watchers" were scurrying around at noon in a manner that ordinarily appertains to the strenuous work after 5 p. m. and men who had made up their minds were being waylaid by "watchers," badgered by McCormick watchers, belabored with arguments and showered with literature.

It was a case of "Hold the home town."

Ryan Men Busy
It must not for one minute be imagined that the Ryan adherents were one bit less active than the followers of McCormick. They were on the job when the polls opened and in some cases actually had more "watchers" than McCormick, which is saying something, and the Ryan "watchers" were just as persistent and as energetic as those who wore the reorganization colors. They were bent on taking "the home town" away from McCormick and were working with a ginger that made the contest well worth watching.

Democrats were actually hustled to the polls before they got through their breakfast and the Ryan men faced McCormick rooters to the homes of doubtful Democrats. It's a good thing that the enrollment act is working. If voting of Democratic ballots was restricted to men enrolled as Democrats there might be some swell total votes to-night. But we can't go into those impossibilities. The fight was to get the fellows who are enrolled. It at sundown there will be any entitled to mark a ballot and deposit it in a box under the eye of the judge of election who hection who followed the inalienable, priceless, precious, inherent right of a Democrat to soak the man whom he does not like, it will not be the fault of "watchers."

Busy in the County
Out in the rural districts of Dauphin county and in those portions of Perry, Lebanon, York and Cumberland where farmers do most inhabit there were men acting as "watchers" who had never done that yeoman duty before. They stood around like greenhorns until the local bosses got busy and chased them to distant farms, where they stood at the fences or followed the seeders and rollers where farmers sat enthroned in triumph, if late, agricultural progress and begged them to come out and vote.

If half a dozen districts in the county there were several Democratic "watchers" where ordinarily it has been hard work to get a dozen Democratic voters to forsake plow and harrow, let alone one to sit around and hold a window book. Some powerful force appeared to have galvanized city and rural Democrats alike to-day. They were all adherents of the policy of "watching," but they were not "waiting" for voters. They were dragging them in.

Farmers Not Voting
Telephone messages received in this city from Perry, Juniata, Snyder, Cumberland and York counties indicate that hundreds of farmers will not go to the polls to-day. Owing to the cool weather, many farmers are away behind in their work and fields have not been seeded. Whole families are working in the fields to catch up with the would spring operations and efforts to get farmers and their sons to go to the polls have been reported as of no use. In parts of Dauphin county where the bulk of the enrollment is of farmers the vote is very light. Many farmers did not enroll at all and those who were in staying away because of their work.

Men who follow politics say that if the same conditions prevail in other counties with a large rural population the vote will run far below the enrollment and may upset some calculations on results.

Assistance Blanks About.
But there were other interesting phases to the primary election than the multiplicity of "watchers" for the Democratic chieftains. They were a delight to the eye when they were acting, but owing to their number liable to block the sidewalks, when not occupied very now and then some one would dart in with some story that would cause a scattering of the crowd. The McCormick people were in a peevish mood of the day over fears of "last cards."

One of the interesting incidents was the demand for "assistance blanks" which swept over the city about noon. There were a score or so of these blanks, which enables a man to make affidavit that he needs help to mark his ballot, placed in each bunch of supplies. No one for an instant imagined that there would be such Democratic activity and the extra blanks were in demand.

It is a fine day and the voters in the city and many urban dwellers are voting, but in the country it's a case of starting the crops.

Interest in Candidates.
It has been so long since Harrisburg has had any state candidates that it was hardly accustomed to the idea of having three. President Judge Kunreth, candidate for supreme court, who has been backed by men of every party for that nomination, is getting a great vote. The attempts started on Market Square to get support for Endlich having failed. The judge voted at the Hope enginehouse, the polling place of the Second precinct of the Fourth ward, and was greeted by many friends. Messages from over the state to his friends told of voting for him being heavy.

In the First precinct of the Fourth ward McCormick voted No. 83. A few hours later William K. Meyers, candidate for Democratic nomination for Congress-at-large, who is aligned with the Ryan forces against the machine, voted at the same voting place. Scrap for Empty Honors.
Backed by the Pa-Mc League Charles S. Prizer, the Middletown single taxer, is waging a fight in the city and boroughs of the three counties of this congressional district against D. L. Kaufman, who is strongest in the countryside than in the towns. Kaufman won in 1912 because he got the farmers, but this year the farmers are busy. No matter which one wins Congressman Kreider, who is unopposed for Republican renomination, will just walk away with the election.

A monkey and parrot fight is being waged in the city for the two Democratic nominations for the legislature. Jesse Jobbhunting Lybarger, is again a candidate. John A. Marshall, Calder B. Shanno and S. T. Kinsinger are likewise running. Lybarger is the machine candidate and the other three are working on their own hook, keeping a keen lookout for any signs of the "double cross."

Nonpartisan—Not To-Day.
Harrisburg's nonpartisan mayor, John K. Royal, was playing partisan politics to-day. He is a candidate for Democratic state committee and was hunting votes. Part of the time he sat in at the voting place of the First precinct of the Fourth ward, holding a book just like he used to do in days before he entered nonpartisan office.

The scrap between the factions of the Democratic party for control of the state machine is reflected in the fight for the two Democratic state committee seats from Dauphin county. Royal and Herr Moeslein, the county chairman, are the machine candidates and Howard O. Holstein, the city chairman, and L. J. Brannen are the men fighting them. In the county outside of the city little interest was being taken in the state committee fight except by postmasters and prospective and hopeful postmasters. The county has no candidates and is apparently letting the city Democrats claw each other over the honors.

Republicans Doing Well.
Without any particular effort the Republicans are polling a big vote. Senator Penrose's visit here last night led up many people for him and he will get a whaling vote in Harrisburg and Dauphin county. The Dimmick strength did not appear to amount to much to-day.

The candidates for the Republican nominations for the legislature in the city, Wildman and Swartz are not opposed and were polling a good vote. In the county the three-cornered fight between Nissley, Young and Gordon for the Republican legislative honors attracted some attention.

This city will have a fine Republican vote in spite of the quiet condition of the campaign.

Great consternation was caused in the Palmer-McCormick camp late yesterday afternoon by the arrival of a special political edition of Hearst's New York Journal containing a terrific broadside against President Wilson's interference in the first statewide primary and his insistence upon the nomination of the White House twins—Palmer and McCormick. Secretary Bryan was assailed for coming to the support of two candidates who had bolted him as the Democratic nominee for President in two campaigns.

It was declared by the Journal that the President's course was certain to defeat the Democratic ticket. "What possible difference," asks the Journal in an editorial, "is there between the old system of having a boss tell the legislature what Senator to elect and having the nation's chief official and his political organization select the man and tell the citizens to run along and endorse the selection? In either case the effect is to take from the people as a whole the right to freely and without interference name the men who represent them in the highest legislative body they know."

It is further contended by the Journal that the picking of two candidates and placing upon them the burden of the administration policies in a state which is already suffering under a free trade tariff, imposed by the administration, dooms them to defeat.

TRESPASSER HELD.

Charged with carrying concealed deadly weapons and trespassing on the Pennsylvania railroad, Henry Taylor, colored, was arrested this morning by Thomas B. Eckerd, special officer, in the local yards. He was committed to jail by Alderman Hoverter.

ALUMNI PLAN RECEPTION.

A meeting of the Technical High School Alumni Association will be held Monday evening at the high school to make arrangements for a reception and banquet to be given to the graduating class.

CHOPPED FINGER FOR WOOD.

Instead of chopping a piece of wood in two as she had intended, Miss Mary Robinson, aged 14 years, of Riverside to-day accidentally chopped off half of her left index finger. She was treated at the Harrisburg hospital.

CAUGHT UNDER WALL

Caught under a falling brick wall while one of the houses in Mulberry street was being razed, Samuel Logan of 11 Eberman Row, was buried under the pile of bricks. He was hurried to the Harrisburg Hospital, suffering with bruises about his body. Logan was cleaning bricks and was sitting along the side of the wall.
