Point Barrow is not northerly, as has been supposed, but westerly. Both Stefansson and Amundsen had believed that a ship entering the pack at Point Barrow would be carried across the pole and to Greenland. Probably the shipwrecked men passed the winter in comfort, having dogs to carry them on hunting expeditions. It is expected that the Canadian government will authorize Captain Robert A. Bartlett, who is at St. Michael where he arrived after a dog team and sea journey from Wrangell island, to engage a ship to go to the island and bring off the 18 men marooned there. Behring Sea is now navigable over its whole area, and the whaler Berman, the relief ship most available, should be able to enter the Arctic zone. The Karuk's men will be landed at Nome, whence they may take a steamer to Seattle. It is not likely that they can reach Nome in time to board a vessel bound for Point Barrow, from which place they could strive to join the second division of the Stefansson expedition at the mouth of the Mackenzie.

To Notify Stefansson

Probably the Canadian government will send depatches down the Mackenzie river by cance to Stefansson, notifying him of the loss of the Karluk will not interfere with the more practical part of the expedition's work, which was the survey and charting of the
