Kansas City, Mo., June 4. — An pinion by the Court of Appeals, which opinion by the Court of Appeals, which awarded Charles A. Edling, a lawyer, $3.500 for being hit on the nose by a foul ball while watching an American Association game here, said: "If the Kansas City Blues had kept their eyes on the ball with the accuracy that they contend Edling should have exhibited, they would have attained a higher place in the pennant race."

The accident to Edling's nose occurred in 1911. The ball hit him after breaking through a wire netting. He obtained a judgment for $3,500. The club owners appealed, contending he either should have caught the ball or dodged it.

It was generally reported that a wholesale desertion of players in organized baseball to the independents would follow a decision favoring the Federals. If this were true, the decision brought to the clubs within the pale of the national agreement more cause for rejoicing than the bare retention of Johnson would have occasioned; but it brought to the new league a correspondingly greater reason for depression, for the expected raid, it was said, was depended on to strengthen weak spots in the Federal teams.
