CHURCHES TO INSIST ON SUNDAY CLOSING

Civic Council Insists on Enforcement of Blue Law; To Give Names to the Police

Sunday closing laws will hereafter be strictly enforced in the city, according to action taken by the Civic Council of Churches at a meeting last night in which the council supported the recommendations of a committee appointed recently to investigate the subject.

Dealers will be asked in a friendly way to close up, according to the plans of the council, and if any fail to take the hint then their names will be placed in the hands of the mayor and district attorney and prosecution will be insisted upon. The Civic Club announced the following resolution, that it had the names of all violators:

"Resolved, that we accept the report of the committee and the announcement made in the morning press of the city that after two weeks' lapse, the Civic Council will ask the proper authorities to cease all places violating the Sabbath laws, assuring them that the council will lend its support toward the enforcement of the Sabbath laws, furnishing them with the names of all violators who are now in the possession of the Civic Council."

Approval of the present course of the poor board in sending Catholic and Protestant children to their respective denominational institutions was approved.

CROWDS VISIT BAZAR

Large crowds last night visited the Allis-Crosby company pavilion in South Fourteenth street and spent a delightful evening. The company is running a bazar and festival, the proceeds of which will go to the State convention fund. Beginning to-night there will be music and special features every evening.

THEIR SEARCH FOR BOY PROVES FUTILE

Pair Follow Clue to This City in Hope of Finding Lost Nephew

A run in a high-powered automobile from Christiansburg, Va., in search of their missing nephew terminated sadly to-day when Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Williamson returned home. A report that the boy, Earl Grumper, 13, had been seen in Carlisle in company with two tramp umbrella men, with whom he is believed to have started out from his home in order to see the wide world, and that the trio had disappeared in the direction of Harrisburg led his guardians to come here.

The boy was missed last Wednesday. Sunday night Mr. and Mrs. Williamson received word of his being in Carlisle and at once took up the clue. They arrived in Carlisle and made a search of tramp retreats around that place and then came on Monday. A careful search of the city was made by the public and also by the Pennsylvania detective force in the railroad yards, but without result.

The pursuers again returned yesterday after traveling throughout the country districts, and gave up the pursuit, although the police of all towns and cities have been notified. The boy is described as having light brown hair and brown eyes a fair skin and was a ready talker.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

SUNDAY CLOSING

To the Editor of The Telegraph:
see announcement in a morning paper that, after two weeks' grace, the Civic Council of Churches will take steps to close retail cigar and confectionery stores. Not only in motion picture houses of small proportions and generally need more than what they get). No mention is made of those who do business on a larger scale and are already well provided for, consider members of the organization opponents of the poor. Were more of the head of a family of eight they could understand the law of necessity better. But by voting the law nature, they lack this knowledge. They are innocent, and willing to wager that most of those who howling for Sunday observance, and after their devotions, ride on street cars, thus compelling others to work, are already well provided for, consider members of the organization opponents of the poor.

Again, why start on the "little felons?" They may hope to increase their church membership (and I have due respect for them and their members) by shutting them out. They will increase club membership and the treasury of the railroad companies and other similar organizations.

Why try to force people outside the churches? Make them so attractive and display more of the true Christian spirit that they will come of their own free will.

SUNDAY CLOSING

To the Editor of The Telegraph:
Good for the Church Council. I am one of the few that keep open. I don't want to work on Sunday. I don't think anybody does. I think all places ought to be closed Sundays, including the week-end and the vespers. Six days a week are enough for any man, or woman either. We got along fine days before we had railroads. We can do now. Good for the churches, I say.

CLARK'S FIELD: By Robert Herrick Houghton, Mifflin company, publishers.

Clark's Field is a twenty-acre piece of pasture land which cannot be sold owing to certain flaws in the title, and which in time becomes the center of a thriving city's suburb. It becomes also the source of great and unequal wealth to the owners, who, by the third generation, have dwindled to a sole representative—the girl who is the leading character in the story. The first year of her life, from its earliest years of foreign travel through her education in a fashionable school, her years spent in Europe with unlimited money at her command, her characteristic marriage and disillusionment, to her finding of herself at the end, is masterly and memorable. The story is worked out faithfully, without morbidity, and with the happy ending which sometimes does not seem in keeping with novels which are true to reality.

The book is notable for its comprehension of American character, its sound literary art, and for a stimulating, ironic humor. It is, in short, a virile and important book, which studies of American life.

DURING THE DAY Colonel Roosevelt has "slowed up," says Cable

London, June 17.—Colonel Theodore Roosevelt placed the seal of doubt on the majority of distinguished auditors of the fellows of the Royal Geographical Society last night in much the same manner as he had done in his lecture at Washington after his return from Brazil, but he did not invite his hearers to ask any questions.

The lecture developed no new points in addition to those made in the address of Washington, D. C.

Colonel's manner of delivery was a surprise and the weakness of his voice astonished his friends, who had been accustomed to his former stentorian tones. There was a noticeable huskiness and lack of driving force, and when the lecturer lowered his voice it was practically impossible to hear him at the table where the reporters sat. This was an absence of the customary gestures. The Colonel did not hammer the table once during the evening. An American who sat near the correspondents remarked: "The Colonel has slowed up."

During the day Colonel Roosevelt paid a round of visits to a number of public institutions including the British Museum, the National History Museum. He took luncheon at Lieutenant-Colonel Lee's house, where he met a number of explorers and big game hunters who had been invited to meet him. These included Sir Harry Johnston, the administrator of Central Africa; Frederick Courtenay Selous and Sir Frances Younghusband, the African and Asian explorer. He was the guest of honor at dinner of the Royal Geographical Society.
