Work of Wrecker Came Nearly Ditching Early Morning Express Near Williamsport

Passenger Engineer Ira Kutz, of 1804 Green street, played a big part in thwarting an attempt to wreck Washington Express, eastward, near Williamsport early yesterday morning. It is at the Newberry Junction that the only hand switch on the main line is in service. A driving rain was falling and the first section of the train due in Harrisburg at 3.45 a.m. had passed the switch in safety when some miscreant broke open the switch, which led into a siding, threw it over and then removed the lights, which placed them on the ground between the tracks with the white light facing oncoming rains in order to mislead the engineer.

The train wrecker did not know engineer.

The train wrecker did not know, however, that in throwing the switch to the siding he had operated an electrical device which showed a green light some distance up the track, so that when the express came down the line at a rate of almost a mile a minutee over the long straight stretch of track at this point, the engineer caught a green cautionary light.

Engineer Kutz slowed up his train and sent his fireman ahead with a lamp to see what was wrong. The passenger train stopped as it was about to move into the siding, on which were a number of cars. The trainmen went ahead and found the broken switch. After fixing the switch to avoid accident to trains following, Engineer Kutz took his train to Williamsport and made a report. Track and switchmen went to Newberry Junction and repaired the damage. and switchmen went to Newbe Junction and repaired the damage.

Burgess Issues Proclamation Urging Everybody to Come and Have a Good Time

On Saturday, July 4, Highspire will have an old-time celebration: In view of this fact Aaron D. Klugh to-day issued a proclamation for a wide-open town. The proclamation is as follows:

Blue-Eyed Baby Smiles Alike on Sued and Suing

A pretty blue-eyed baby, scarcely more than a year old, was the central figure in a lawsuit before Squire Gardner this morning. In her mother's arms the infant smiled and cooed at the belligerent principals of the lawsuit as they sat around the squire's desk and glared at each other, bestowing her smiles alike on the suing and sued.

stowing her smiles alike on the suing and sued.

The lawsuit started when Joseph Brakovich, son of a prominent West Side business woman, preferred charges of assault and battery against Mrs. Katle Mahovlic, keeper of a boarding house at 250 Main street.

According to the charges, Mrs. Mahovlic seized the infant from its mother's arms as the mother and father were about to leave the boarding house.

birch variety.)
Definite announcement of the organization of the class for grown-up girls was made to-day by Playground Supervisor J. K. Staples. The lessons will be given from 5.45 to 7.15 every Thursday as long as there is a demand for them. Should the classes grow to large proportions, it is probable that the Seneca street bathhouse will be opened for the purpose also.
The adult classes are intended primarily for the girls of the department stores, the stenographers and others who are employed during the physical inspection of minors applying for employment certificates.

Engineer Returns. — Chief Engineer F. Herbert Snow, of the Public Service Commission, has returned from Pittsburgh where he made inspections.
