TYPICAL SCENES IN 101 RANCH WILD WEST SHOW

COWBOY IS REALLY WELL-DRESSED MAN

Puncher With Circus Pays as High as $100 For Sombrero and $100 For His Boots

The typical cowboy does not look like a well-dressed man, but he is from the standpoint of actual cost. The man from the effete East who spends as high as $5 for a straw hat or $10 for a silk "tie" thinks he is going some; but there are cowpunchers with the 101 Ranch show who are credited with spending from $25 to $100 for a sombrero. Even straw sombreros, made in Mexico, cost as high as $50. If the average man pays from $10 to $15 for a pair of custom-made boots he has reached his limit. The cowboy's most ordinary boots and spurs—and the spurs are an absolutely part of the footwear equipment—will put a big hole in a $50 bill. The boots are made of the finest leather, with high heels and a short vamp, and the spurs, as a rule, are chased and often set in jewels. The average workman pays a dollar for a suit of overalls. The chaperajos, or, as the cowboy calls them, the "chaps," are the cowpuncher's overalls. They are made of fringed leather and angora goat or lamb's wool, with the woolly side out, and these cost from $5 up. The city man has his linen shirt and collars and costly cravat, but these do not begin to "eat into money" like the cowboy's necessary outfit of leather shirt and holsters and sidearms. And then there is his saddle. Many of the saddles utilized by the cowboys cost more than the horses they ride. One can buy a saddle for $25 and get good service out of it, but the great ambition of a cowboy—and the cowgirls, too, for that matter—is to have a saddle just a little finer than the "other fellow." This leads to a rather extravagant emulation, and hundreds of dollars are sometimes expended for beautifully embossed and decorated saddles. Joseph C. Miller, the cattleman and amusement director of the 101 Ranch show, which Harrisburg is scheduled to see next Monday, July 6, has a saddle that cost over $5,000. The leather was carved and embossed in Mexico. All the trimmings are of silver, the owner's initials and the name of the ranch are worked in diamonds, rubies and other stones, and the eyes of the silver steers' heads that ornament the corners are large diamonds. The cowboy and cowgirl enjoy exhibiting their expensive finery, whether in the performance or the parade, and it is this purely human touch of vanity

LEBANON LICENSE REVOKED

Special to The Telegraph
Lebanon, Pa., July 2.—The Majestic Hotel, one of the oldest licensed places in this city, was closed by order of Judge C. V. Henry, president judge of the Lebanon county courts, who revoked the license of Daniel Gehret. Residents of the neighborhood fought for the revocation of the license and proved frequent violations of the law under Gehret's proprietorship. Judge Henry, in revoking the license, dismissed the application for its transfer to William Neal, the bartender. The property is owned by Frank Lauer, the Reading brewer. This is the second license to be revoked this year by Judge Henry; he having closed the Washington House, Annville, five months ago.

Police Dog Given Room in Waldorf-Astoria

Special to The Telegraph
New York, July 2.—Despite a hard and fast rule in force for years that only toy dogs could go above the first floor of the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, the big Belgian police dog owned by William Walker Smith, United States Consul General to Santo Domingo, has a comfortable room entirely to himself on the seventh floor. There is a good reason for the rule being violated in his case. "That dog," said Mr. Smith, "saved me from drowning," and he intimated the dog had a right to the best there is. H. L. Stewart, assistant manager, liked the looks of the dog and decided that the animal was entitled to a room.

Gland From Monkey Is Grafted on Young Boy

Special to The Telegraph
Paris, July 2.—The radical cure of a cretin—one suffering from cretinism, a disease characterized by physical deformity and imbecility—by grafting the thyroid gland of a monkey, was described at the Academy of Medicine by Doctor Voronoff, a well-known surgeon. The patient, a child of 14 years, was attacked by myxoedema at the age of 8, as an after effect of scarlet fever. His physical and intellectual growth stopped. Six months ago Doctor Voronoff, in the presence of nineteen doctors, grafted on the child's neck the right lobe of the thyroid gland of a large baboon. Almost immediately the patient improved. Members of the Academy consider the operation of great importance and tending to confirm the great possibilities of constructive surgery, as introduced by Dr. Alexis Carrel, of New York. Special interest in the case lies in the fact that this is said to be the first time that the grafting of an organ from a lower animal to a human has been successful.
