Harrisburg School Sketches

BY J. HOWARD WERT

No. 8—Stories of Pathos and Human Interest From the Schools of Long Ago

At the time of which I am writing the public schools of our city were divided into six grades, termed subprimary, primary, secondary, intermediate, grammar and high. Most of these grades below the high school were supposed to consist of a two year course. These terms have long been obsolete in Harrisburg's school work. There is a nine-year course leading up to the high school designated as the first year, second year, etc., but arrangements have now been made by the school authorities whereby bright pupils, in certain grades of the work, can do two years' work of the curriculum in a single year. This much in explanation of what I am about to relate.

A Man Who Studied With Little Children

There has been many incidents pathetic and of deep human interest in the schoolrooms of the city as decade after decade of work has been recorded, some of which, at least, should be preserved as incentives or warnings to others. The DeWitt or old Lancaster building in Walnut street, on the present site of the Technical High School, in which the writer was an assistant and subsequently a principal, for many years continued every one of the six grades enumerated above; and it was the only building in the city that did.

In this building, in the years of the past, I have seen a husky youth of 17 years of age, a man in size, but six weeks in America, studying day after day, with little children of the primary grade, to master the rudiments of the English language. There were then no night schools in our city, nor provision of any kind for adults who desired to be proficient in a language. This man, a fellow plodder on day after day. He heeded not the gibes on the playground, sometimes verging on coarse insults, that came from grammar and high school pupils, who taunted him about his association with little children. He answered only with a smile the petty annoyances of the little urchins who wondered to see one of a size so gigantic in their midst.

He learned to read, and never for one moment did he allow that object to pass from his perspective. He had been born to poverty and reared with want ever staring into the windows of his humble home. By patient drudgery his parents, in long years of toll, had at length acquired the means to pay for a steerage passage to America—land of the free—land of equal opportunity. And this aspiring youth longed to fit himself quickly to enter into life's competition and help his parents to acquire a home.

In three months' time, by study at school and practice at home, under the direction of a kind neighbor, he learned to read, write and speak the English language sufficiently to apply for a position. He was diligent, honest and painstaking, and rapidly rose to better and yet better employment. Fortune led him to one of the chief cities of the coal region where he was an honored, respected and useful citizen whose check was good for thousands.

Woods Are Full of Poison Ivy

First Get Your Blood Right—Then You're Safe

All country people, and city folks before taking to the woods should fortify their blood with S. S. S. This famous blood purifier not only drives all poisons out of the system but puts the blood in a condition to resist the effects of poison ivy and other terrors that constantly beset us. You never can tell what a slight abrasion of the skin may lead to. A small scratch by barb wire or thorn will often open the way to serious trouble. Then there is the danger of impure water, of clogged bowels, of mineral poisons already in the system, of public towels and numerous other traps to set the blood on fire. Let S. S. S. purify your blood and if poisons have invaded the system begin S. S. S. at once and drive them out.

all obstacles because the impulses of a man were in him. And right beside him, in that primary school, were American-born youths who, neglected every educational opportunity, thought it a feat of glory to "bag it," as young America termed truancy, and have tasted the bitter ashes of their neglect in all their future lives.

I have seen boys come into that old Boys' High School of that Lancastrerian building who were from homes of refinement and comparative wealth. They had fond parents who were desirous of giving them finished educations. And I have seen some of these boys who continually shirked every duty of school, defied parental authority and ignored every appeal of teachers to apply themselves to honest, conscientious work,—who became shiftless bums and wandering vagabonds on the face of the earth.

I have seen beside these same short-sighted youth, boys who came from the homes of impoverished widows to whom the purchase of the necessary school books for a high school course was an onerous burden. Studious, alert, self-reliant, I have seen these poor boys go forth into the world well equipped for life's struggle and to-day occupying commanding positions in the business, political and professional life of our own State and of other Commonwealths.

"Honor and shame from no condition rise; Act well your part,—there all the honor lies."

Yet the same tragedies will be repeated till the end of time,—and along the ages men and women will discover, when too late, that a wasted youth brings a life of remorse.

A Heroine of the School Room

Many years ago, when Charles C. Clark presided over the Girls' High School of Harrisburg, located in State street near Third, there was a studious girl who won the love of all her teachers by her application and gentle disposition. She never missed a session, and was tardy often—very often, always stating with an engaging smile that she had been detained by some necessary housework.

The wonder of her teachers was somewhat excited when, on several occasions, she was noticed dropping off into a sleep at her desk. And inquiries carefully made developed that she was indeed a heroine of humble life—one of the thousands of this world's noble souls who walk on, year after year, without a murmur, in the rugged path of duty because it is the path of duty.

Her mother was dead and this gentle girl in her teens had become a true, devoted mother to her little orphaned brothers and sisters. On some days she rose at 4 o'clock in the morning to do the family washing before she started to school. From each session of school she hastened home to get the meals and long into the night she patched and mended and did the thousand little things necessary to keep up a happy and comfortable home. And with this all, she ever maintained a respectable standing in her class. It is a pleasure to think that the future had sunnier skies for this heroine of the schoolroom.

I recall, in the years of the far past, a female teacher of our city who went to her grave a martyr to her sense of duty in keeping together in comfort a numerous and not too appreciative family all of whom seemed to depend on her and her alone to supply everything, do everything, without themselves putting a hand to the ear. But she rests quietly, life's fitful fever o'er, and the story is best not to be paraded in its entirety at this late day.

Greatest Event in Woman's Life

All human experience looks back to motherhood as the wonder of wonders. The patience, the fortitude, the sublime faith during the period of expectancy are second only to the mother love bestowed upon the most helpless but most marvelous creature—a baby.
Women are quick to learn from each other those helpful agencies that aid to comfort, that conserve their nervous energy and yet are perfectly safe to use and among these they recommend "Mother's Friend."
It is entirely an external application designed to lubricate the broad, flat muscles and skin that protect the abdomen. It has been in favorable use for nearly half a century and is known to mothers in almost every settled community in the United States who highly recommend it. You will find it on sale in drug stores. "Mother's Friend" is utterly harmless, contains no deadening drugs and yet its influence in the skin and muscles beneath as also upon the network of nerves beneath the skin is very beneficial, very soothing and a wonderful help.
The muscles expand naturally and are not subjected to unnecessary surface strain and pain.
Get a bottle of "Mother's Friend" today at any drug store and write to us for our instructive little book to mothers. Address Bradfield Regulator Co., 415 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

EXCELLENT VAUDEVILLE AT THE COLONIAL

If you never have had an opportunity to see Eva Tanguay, just because it costs the price of a week's meal ticket to reach the heights of that young lady's art every time she comes to town, spend a few cents and go to the Colonial and witness in Miss Mary Maxfield, a youthful personage of every bit as much magnetism and cyclonic ability as the much-heralded one who has forged her way to the front. Miss Maxfield is not an imitator, indeed not, but she has a way of her own that is in the same class with that of Miss Tanguay, and if the usual order of things can be relied upon to hold good in her case, you can bank on it that the name of Mary Maxfield will soon blaze forth over the doorway of the theater where pasteboards come at two a throw. On the same bill are two other acts of excellent ability, and the homemade movie, showing Bowman's picnic and a chain of happy events in Reservoir Park. To-night will be the big Country Store event.—Advertisement.
