Many Failures Recorded, But More Would Have Been Registered if Markets Had Remained Open

Registered if Markets Had Remained Open

By Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 1. — After four days of severe unsettlement, resulting from the Austro-Hungary situation, the New York Stock Exchange decided to discontinue operations and yesteraly close. It is altogether likely that the exchange might have proceeded to do business, regardless of the more menacing war outlook, but for the fact that the closing of the London Exchange left it in a position where it would have had to absorb the stock offerings of all the world's markets. This is westerned by the market is firm; powdered, 4.50c; fine granulated, 4.40c; the movements, which had their original start in heavy sales of our securities by London and the Continental markets. The one topic of discussion and cause for apprehension lay across the water, all domestic factors, such as the cropoutlook, delay in the Eastern freight and one to the inited Square stadement of the closing of these portions and continuous and the imposition of almost prohibitive "war risks" demanded by the marine insurance companies for shipment of gold to London and Paris which again attained large proportions. The Stock Exchange and Cotton Exchange followed the closing of these institutions, but it is believed that more disastrous effects would have resulted but for the suspension of business.
