

Women AND Their Interests

Summertime Fables

By DOROTHY DIX

Once upon a time there was a Youth, who, perceiving that he was in the Also Ran Class, and was never likely to win out in the Race of Life, determined to make an end of himself. Thereupon he sought the Big Drink, but before he took the Fatal Plunge, he sat down upon the Bank and Wept a few. While he was thus Bemoaning his Fate, an Old Man, observing his Grief, approached and addressed him.

Lady's Pet, and have the Fair Ones sighing for your Favor."

"Mock me not," returned the Youth, "but such is the Desire of my Heart."

"Also," continued the Gray Beard, "that you would not Look with Disfavor upon Easy Money."

"Try me," exclaimed the Youth.

"Likewise," suggested the Venerable Philanthropist, "that you would not Seriously Object to Occupying the Center of the Stage, and having the Spotlight Turned on You."

"In pity," pleaded the Youth, "quit pulling that Earthly Paradise Stuff on me."

"All may be yours," quoth the Old Man, "if you will only follow my Counsel. Arise, go forth and Pursue yourself Glad Raiment, and Beat It to the Nearest Summer Resort. There shall Fair Women struggle for your Favor, and Claw each other's Eyes out for the Privilege of Tangoing with you, and also shall they feed you on Rich Foods and ply you with Costly Drinks, and Ride you about in Automobiles. Likewise you may Marry the Daughter of a Pork King, for a Think is of Value in Proportion to its Rarity, and a Man at a Summer Resort is as a Pearl in a Barrel of Clams."

Thereupon the Youth did as the Old Man bade him, and the Result was even as the Wise One had Phrophesied.

Moral: This Fable teaches that the Summer is the Young Man's Opportunity, and Sagacious is he who Embraces it.

The QUARRY

Ranscombe brought his right fist down on his desk and shot out his lower jaw as he stared at Kearney.

"You bloodhound!" he half screamed. Kearney sat down in a chair beside the desk and half covered his face with his big, red paws.

"Boss," he growled, "Montgomery was the kind of man who would be crucified for those he loved."

"How did you trail him?"

"I went to his home town and found that his mother was dead," explained the man hunter. "I looked up the cemetery and found that the keeper was being paid for caring for the grave. I traced the letters inclosing the money and found that the son—"

"Didn't you have heart enough or brains enough to stop?"

"When I reached him I wanted to stop. I wanted to stop, boss. But you trained me never to let up."

Ranscombe kicked back his chair and paced the room, holding in his hands the telegram he had taken from his desk. He shuddered when he paused before his sleuth whom he had trained so well.

"Read that," he said, handing him the telegram.

Kearney scratched his head as he read the words of this message:

Tucson, Arizona. Ranscombe, Chief Detectives, New York; Harry Gutzler, old yegg, dying here of consumption, confesses murder of Trueblood, bank watchman, New York, eleven years ago. Ex-convict named Hawkins found him in bad lands and brought him in. ALSO, Chief.

The inspector had gone to a window and was staring out of it abstractedly.

Kearney read the telegram a second and then a third time. He looked up at the broad back of his chief, placed the telegram on his desk and moved gingerly from the room. He did not lift his eyes or speak a word as he passed Jimmy Dunn, perched round and cherub-like on a chair at the big desk of the assembly room. His traveling bag lay outside. He picked it up without stopping and departed from headquarters.

Kearney took a trolley to Duane street and transferred to a horse car to the farther east side.

The dust and grime of long travel were still on him. In the return from the last lap in the long man hunt that had taken eleven years he had had too many things to think over to bother about wash basins and combs and brushes. On the stoop of the old-fashioned house in Oliver street he found a group of old Irish women of the neighborhood. He knew their faces and nodded to them.

They huddled in a tighter knot of worried humanity.

"What's the matter?" he demanded.

"Ye're none too soon," said one of them.

The others began to croon softly to themselves. He knew what that meant.

The grip fell from his hand, but he steadied himself and entered the house, mounting the stairs slowly. He walked into the kitchen of the little flat and found it spotlessly clean.

An old woman sat in a chair by the window, the beads of a rosary passing through her withered fingers. She was not his mother!

Kearney removed his hat and crossed the threshold of his old mother's bedroom. She lay in bed, and at first he thought her asleep.

Her hands, like brown wax, were clasped about the last copy of the "Key of Heaven" he had bought for her.

Beside the head of the bed two holy candles burned on a little table. A priest knelt on the floor, praying for the soul of the departed.

Kearney fell upon his knees and crossed himself once, twice and a third time.

A cry of distress came from the bottommost reaches of his heart in a low, pitifully sad wblne.

"Aie, aie, aie!" it sounded.

It was the plaint of an animal with a soul.

CHAPTER XVII.

Restitution.

THE last act of Inspector Ranscombe, before turning over his office to his successor, was to send to John Nelson the original police records taken of James Montgomery. He offered his services in any step that he might take to have the courts of New York right the wrong that had been done him. The inspector also wrote confidentially to the governor of the state giving full details of the case.

Nelson, his hands again healed, and his wife and her family grateful that he had not been permanently crippled, took Mr. Bryan into his confidence and placed the whole matter before him, asking his advice.

The police of Tucson provided the New York authorities with ample details of the confession of the dying yegg. He was too far gone to send east a prisoner. When Nelson learned of this he asked that efforts be made to let the man die outside of prison. The yegg's own Maker had taken his case from the hands of the law.

Mr. Bryan engaged eminent counsel in New York to have the case of James Montgomery formally reopened by the appellate division of the supreme court. A reversal of the verdict found by the lower court was entered in the records and "Acquitted" replaced the word "Convicted."

August Furniture Sale

Brown & Co., 1217-1219 N. 3rd St.

The Biggest Money-Saving August Furniture Sale Will Be Held Up-town

Almost all of our entire stock of medium and high-grade furniture subjected to extraordinarily heavy price reductions this month in order to stimulate business. Our store is one of the largest in the city and comprises a stock of the medium and high-grade lines, the equal of any in the city. It is situated in the up-town business section, conducted on an economical expense basis, enabling us at all times to quote prices on our goods somewhat below the prices prevailing in other stores where their expenses are higher.

Genuine Reductions

We have established a record for reliability and square dealing. Our representations are always honest, according to our knowledge and belief. Our regular customers know this and rarely hesitate to accept our representations as true and right. We personally guarantee this August Sale to be exactly as represented, every reduction to be genuine, and no trashy goods brought into our store specially for this occasion, as is often done by unscrupulous dealers. It is a reduced sale of our regular lines and is an actual money-saving opportunity for those who contemplate and are ready to purchase furniture this month.

Miss Fairfax Answers Queries

TOO MERCENARY DEAR MISS FAIRFAX: I am very much attached to a young man. This young man has called on me a few times. He has a profession and thinks very much of it. It does not appear to me very much. I don't think he can earn a living for a wife, as he does not spend any money at all when he takes a girl out. How can I find out what he makes, for I love him dearly and do not want to be misled by him? BETTY BLONDE. YOU are far too mercenary. If ever this young man asks you to marry him you are free to discuss his income and to decide whether or no you can live on it. In the meantime, if you object to his profession and to the fact that he spends no money on you, discontinue your friendship. He seems in far more danger of being misled by a pretty girl who values money above manhood than you are of giving your affections distinterestedly.

YOU ARE VERY CRITICAL

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX: I am a young girl of 20 and very much in love with a young man two years my senior. I have been going out with him to various places for the past month. But have broken my friendship with him because he attends cabaret shows and keeps very late hours. Please advise me if I am right in doing so, as I love this fellow very much. HEARTBROKEN E. A. DON'T be over-critical. Cabarets and late hours of themselves are not wrong. If the young man does not drink or associate with evil people he is doing no harm. Be careful, at least your unjust action in depriving him of your friendship drive him to harmful companions.

DON'T BE SILLY

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX: I am a high school student and am in love with a college graduate. He greets me, but does not know I love him. Should I press my attentions or try to give him up? ONE IN LOVE. For a girl to talk of "pressing her attentions" upon a man who does not know she loves him is absurd at once. You will only make a fool of yourself, my dear girl, if you give your love unsought—and a little high school student must think of winning promotion in her studies instead of hearts!

BIG FEATURE PICTURE AT COLONIAL

Combined with its regular show of vaudeville, the Colonial during the early half of this week is trying the experiment of presenting one of the largest of film features, a picture that recently ran to packed houses in Philadelphia at twenty-five and fifty cents a seat. This is a film production from the celebrated novel "Atlantis" and contains all of the thrilling scenes in that story, including the sensational sinking of the liner Roland in mid-ocean, with hundreds of passengers on board. No better idea of the panicky situation on board the big vessels that have gone down in process in the past few years can be given than the surprisingly realistic sinking of this big boat. Three excellent acts are on the bill with this picture.—Advertisement.
