The directors had no quorum and definite action in the matter was impossible. Robert M. Representatives of the university who are in this city will meet with the directors at this time.

Considerable enthusiasm is being shown in the movement throughout Harrisburg. It is believed that plans will be completed which will enable the opening of the branch early in September. Thomas Montgomery, president of the alumni association and State Librarian, said:

"There is a possibility that we may be able to induce the University of Pennsylvania to open a brunch of the extension school here. This is a great opportunity for Harrisburg and we shall do all we can to bring the advantages of a college education to those who cannot spend the time or afford to go to Philadelphia for it."

"Professor Sheetz, Assistant State Librarian, said: "Young business men frequently come to the State Library and ask for books on the various subjects which are taught in the Wharton school of finance and accounts of the University of Pennsylvania. This indicates to me very clearly that there will be a great number of students who will immediately seize uppan an opportunity to get the university training."

Men who spoke on the subject were warm in praise of the idea. Among those who talked were:

Charles S. Boll, president of the Union Trust Company: "It's a wonderful idea. Such a school in Harrisburg should meet with instant success."
