POPE PIUS DIES WITH MOTTO ON LIPS

which dropped pulseless on the Pope's breast. The physician bent over the bed, listening for a heart that was stilled. "It is all over," he said and reverently kissed the Pontiff's hand. In turn the others did the same, after which they intoned prayers for the dead.

Immediately after, candlelights flickered in all the windows of the Vatican and the whole personnel of the Apostolic Palace, with the permission of the Papal Secretary, passed by the body, kissing the hand of the Pontiff as they passed. Throughout the night messages had been received from the heads of many States inquiring the condition of His Holiness. All were immediately notified of his death by Cardinal Merry Del Val.

The Italian Premier, Signor Salandra, at once ordered that the necessary measures be taken to guarantee the complete liberty of the provisional government of the Church and of the Sacred College of Cardinals, which is the temporary custodian of the supreme power of the Church during the interim pending the election of a Pope.

Conclave Is Discussed The matter of a conclave was discussed today. It is said that the majority of the cardinals are in favor of holding it in Rome, as is usual, and further because of the neutrality of Italy in the present war. Others, however, suggested that it would be better to meet in Holland, a country which they regarded as even more neutral than Italy. Among the candidates already mentioned are Cardinals Maffi, De Lai, Ferrara, Agliardi, Pompili and Seratini, the last named ex-nuncio of Mexico.

In this ceremony the chamberlain lifts the covering from the face of the dead and a silver hammer touches the forehead three times, saying each time: "Giuseppe Sarto!"

When there is no reply he announces: "The pope is really dead."

This is done in the presence of the cardinals, a few intimates of the dead and the Italian Premier, Signor Salandra, who will prepare the body for the tomb.

Later the body will be removed to another room where it will be embalmed. The sacred college will divide on the day upon which it will be transported to St. Peter's for the three days' chapel service before burial. The funeral service will be held in the Sistine Chapel.

Those interested in coincidences point out that the pope died on August 20, eleven years and one month after the death of Pope Leo, on July 20, 1903.

It is expected that the conclave for the election of a pope will be held on September 3, after a delay to give time for the cardinals from several countries to arrive. Even so it is doubtful whether Cardinals Gibbons and O'Connell can reach here by that time from the United States, and Cardinal Cavalcanti, from Rio Janeiro, will be diverted to Cardinal Rampolla if he needed to give him a majority. The votes for the less conspicuous candidates were a matter of compliment, the two for Luigi Oreglia di Santo Stefano, the dean of the sacred college, being due to the fact that he was the only surviving cardinal appointed by Pius IX.

All that seemed to remain for the conclave to do, therefore, was to make the vote unanimous for Cardinal Rampolla, but something intervened. Although all that takes place in a conclave is supposed to be under the seal of secrecy, yet cardinals are both human, and the walls of their palaces have ears, and before many days had elapsed after the election of Pius X it became generally known what that something was.

It seems that Cardinal Rampolla was no favorite at the Austrian court, owing to his French origin, and so when the Austrian cardinals were about to depart for the conclave they had been advised by the Emperor Francis Joseph to invoke what is known as the Spanish veto in case Rampolla's election seemed a certainty. This article is said to have been proposed to the king of Spain or the emperor of Austria "forbid" the election of a certain candidate who might be deemed "unworthy," or, in other words, who might act contrary to the foreign policies of Spain or Austria, as the case might be.

So Rampolla was defeated. It is worthy of note that one of the first acts of the new pontiff was not only to have followed, except that, while the would-be electors of the former secretary of state were willing to unite and elect a conservative churchman, they would not unite on Vannutelli. Thus in the end a unanimous vote was given to a cardinal who was known to be without party or policy. This cardinal was Giuseppe Sarto, the patriarch of Venice. The position of the new pope was not difficult. He could not consistently unite himself with either the party of Rampolla or that of Vannutelli—neither with the party of adjustment nor that of noncompromise. Although the leaning of the French direction, he must make his own way. He chose a middle course. In matters of dogma and of domestic instruction he would be conservative. Where these matters concerned with secular thought or policy he would still be conservative and would pray for light.

Pius X was not reactionary. If he seems to have been so in his dealing with the French, Spanish and Portuguese Separatists, with Italian, English and German modernism, and with trivial but sensational matters as the Fairbanks and Roosevelt episodes, it must be remembered that, if he acted in accordance with the traditions of the mother church, which could not be changed to meet every arriving contingency that had its origin outside the church.

The pope announced that his program was summarized in the phrase "Restore all in Christ." Before all else he wanted to give his subjects all promotion of piety, and he advised all to receive holy communion frequently, and if possible daily. It was by his desire that the eucharistic congress of 1905 was held in Rome, which enhanced the solemnity of subsequent eucharistic congresses, notably that of Montreal and more recently that held at Madrid, by sending to them cardinal legates.

Recognition of American Church Among the early reforms of the late pontiff was the introduction of Gregorian chant for modern music, and, wherever practical, the substitution of ecclesiastical choirs for the singing of paid laymen. An early "motu proprio" abolished the Roman congregations of indulgences and relics, founded by Clement IX, and so developed by successive popes as to make deep inroads on the revenues of the Vatican. Again, the first "Gerrachia Cattolica" issued under his administration showed the suppression of the names of no less than six popes of Noble Ecclesiastics in Rome, and in 1893 he was appointed master of the Robes and Privy Chamberlain to Leo XIII. He had performed certain diplomatic missions with notable success, such as adjusting the school question in Manitoba, and had acted as Papal envoy to the coronation of Edward VII.

men and diplomats. Pius X turned out to be such a pontiff, whatever may have been his temporal diplomatic defeats when measured by the accomplishments of the previous pontificate.

From a material point of view when Pius X came to occupy the chair of St. Peter, in the summer of 1903, the opportunity seemed most propitious for a reorganization of French Catholicism. To be sure, the associations law, restricting or dissolving Catholic orders, had been promulgated, but such a separation would not necessarily mean a separation of church and state except in so far as might result in a new concordat amicably negotiated between the Vatican and the government of the French republic. Indeed, Cardinal Rampolla, when secretary of state, had believed that a partial separation might be advisable, but such a separation would not necessarily mean a separation of church and state except in so far as might result in a new concordat amicably negotiated between the Vatican and the government of the French republic.

The Work of Merry Del Val Nominally the Papal Secretary of State is only the director of the diplomacy of the Vatican; in practice, in these modern days he is the "alter ego" of the Pope and consequently associated with his affairs, even though they have nothing to do with diplomacy. Merry del Val was secretary of the Papal Consistory convened after the death of Pope Leo in July, 1903. He was just 38 years of age, having been born in London in 1865, while his father was secretary of the Spanish Embassy there. On both sides he was of English descent, and his bringing up had been principally English. At the age of 24 he had been admitted to the Academy of Noble Ecclesiastics in Rome, and in 1893 he was appointed master of the Robes and Privy Chamberlain to Leo XIII. He had performed certain diplomatic missions with notable success, such as adjusting the school question in Manitoba, and had acted as Papal envoy to the coronation of Edward VII.

Usually the secretary of the last consistory before the conclave is first to receive the "red hat" of the Cardinalate from the new Pope, as the latter discards his for the "beretta bianca" or white cap, of the pontiff. But on the occasion Pius X folded up his red hat and put it in his pocket, and, nodding in the direction of Merry del Val, said: "He will receive something else before the purple."

Merry del Val was already a titular Archbishop, having received the See of Nicotina in 1902. On October 18, 1903, he was appointed Papal Secretary of State and at the first public consistory in the following November he was made a cardinal.

Within the church great progress was made, particularly in non-Catholic lands, where the number of converts has more than made up the loss that the church has suffered in nominally Catholic countries. Numerous reforms have been made in regard to the administration of the church and in discouraging adherence to certain traditions which the lay Catholic was apt to interpret as matters of doctrine.

It would take too long to enumerate all the reforms of a religious and administrative character initiated by Pius X. A few of these have already been mentioned. Others were a thorough reorganization of the Roman Church, which was still ruled by the bull of Sixtus V. of 1588; the codification of ecclesiastical law, which is well under way, and, more epoch-making than either of the preceding, the revision of the Vulgate Bible, which task was assigned to the Benedictine order, Abbot Gasquet, the English historian, being president of the commission of revision. A school for biblical criticism was established in Rome. New legislation on marriage was introduced. Beside the United States, Pius X also withdrew Canada, Newfoundland, Great Britain, Holland and Luxemburg from the jurisdiction of propaganda side, removing them from among the missionary countries. The importance of the American church was also recognized by Pius in 1911 when he increased the number of American cardinals to four, bestowing the red hat on Archbishop Farley, of New York; Archbishop O'Connell, of Boston, and Archbishop Falconio, former apostolic delegate at Washington, who, although an Italian by birth, is an American citizen.

In the pontificate of Pius X the Catholic hierarchy all over the world has had the following increase: New archiepiscopal sees 18 New episcopal sees 53 New abbacies and prelates nullius 4 New vicarates apostolic 37 New prefectures apostolic 34 The total number of residential archbishops and bishops in communion with the see of Rome is 240,000,000 to 350,000,000.

Use "Gets-It," Corns Shrivels, Vanish!

It's the New Way, and You'll Forget You Ever Had Corns

"2 drops put on in 2 seconds, corn shrivels, comes clean off!" That's the marvelous story of "GETS-IT," the new-plan corn cure. Nothing can be simpler for the cure of corns—and it never fails. That's why millions of people are using "GETS-IT" and throwing away their willy plasters, sticky tape, ice-eating salves, and "wrap-around" outfits that make a bundle around the toe and choke it into pain by pressing either on or around the corn. There is nothing to stick to your stocking, nothing to cause inflammation or rawness, nothing to press on or around the corn. You apply it in 2 seconds. No more knives, razors, scissors or files, with their blood-poisoning dangers. Try "GETS-IT" for that corn, callous, wart or bunion.

"GETS-IT" is sold by druggists everywhere, 25c a bottle, or sent direct by E. Lawrence & Co., Chicago.

Pennsylvania. The big meeting will be held in Philadelphia, September 7-10. In his notice, R. F. Cook, secretary of the local association, urges Harrisburg members to attend, and says: "Some of the best trade talkers in America have been secured. The Hon. John Wanamaker, Paul Findlay, Fred Mason and many others will talk on 'Store Management,' 'Business Ethics,' 'Costs of Doing Business' and 'Service That Pays.'"

Headquarters will be at the new Hotel Adelphi. Sessions of the convention will be held in the hotel.
