DR. BRUMBAUGH'S CANDIDACY

THE REV. GEO. B. BRUMBAUGH, Father of Dr. J. G. Brumbaugh, Republican Candidate for Governor

every direction as he left the train and met the hundreds of people who had gathered at the station to give him their first neighborly greeting. He left the station and proceeded his way through the crowd toward the Leister Hotel, where his octogenarian father, the Rev. George Boyer Brumbaugh, of Markleburg, the native village of the candidate, was waiting to receive his son. But he couldn't wait until the Doctor had entered the hotel. He pushed forward as the crowd made way for him and in response to the greeting "Hello, Dad," he responded, "Hello, Boy," and they were locked in each other's embrace, tears streaming from the eyes of both father and son. It was much a spectacle as was witnessed when President Garfield, after taking the oath at Washington, leaned down and kissed his aged mother before he started to the White House. The crowd cheered and cheered.

Then for two or three hours before the night meeting at the principal theater Dr. Brumbaugh's friends were coming in solid masses to tell him how glad they were over his selection as the Republican standard bearer and upon their neighborly and sincere wishes. There was no standing off at the side in a pretense of dignified reserve. He wanted to meet his friends face to face and to hear above most of them he was easily the most conspicuous figure in that laughing, sincere crowd. With his arm around an old friend there was a constant interchange of friendly remarks. They talked over their boyhood days when he worked on the farm and later in the lumber camp and still later in the coal mines. He was a constant reminder of his boyhood days when he worked on the farm and later in the lumber camp and still later in the coal mines.

All history in the future, so far as Huntington is concerned, will date from the home-coming of the splendid leader who has been chosen to carry the standard of the Republican party in this State. He is a man of high character on every tongue and his progress through the streets in the brief parade that preceded the night meeting, during which he sat in an automobile beside his aged and happy father, was a continuous ovation. There were salvos of cheers and waving of handkerchiefs from illuminated houses on every hand. Huntington has never had a more favorable reception and with fireworks and flags and horns and in every conceivable manner the happiness of the people over the return of one who had done them proud in his career as a statesman, a patriot and a man of high character. "Our Friend, Our Neighbor and Governor, Thrice Welcome."

When the great procession reached the theater it was packed, stage, auditorium and gallery, and thousands clamored outside in a hopeless effort to get within ear-shot of the distinguished citizen who had come back to them. As soon as Dr. Brumbaugh finished his splendid speech, excellent in substance and in its neighborly sincerity, he hurried away and addressed another enormous crowd from a stand in the principal square of the town. Here he was given another ovation and until he left for Philadelphia at 1 o'clock this morning, in order to meet his engagements for today, his friends continued their exhibitions of good will and their pledges of cordial support.

After hearing his speech to-night a man who has been a student of political conditions for a generation pointed out the remark that Dr. Brumbaugh was more conspicuously the candidate of the people than any nominee of any party within his time. "He will be elected by an overwhelming plurality in November. He has grasped the meaning of the political movements of recent years as few men have been able to grasp it. His speech and his sympathies, his greatest appreciation of the part to be accomplished by sanity in progress and his desire to be of service to the State he loves will within the next thirty days absolutely eliminate any hope this year of the election of anybody except himself to the gubernatorial office."

There were many Washington party men among those who pressed forward to greet Dr. Brumbaugh and assure him of their support. But many of these men declared that there was no excuse for opposing him and their judgment any effort to continue opposition to the party of Progressives to Dr. Brumbaugh will injure the movement more than it will injure the Republican candidate.

The formal meeting at the theater was called to order by County Chairman Samuel F. Spiker, who was cordially congratulated by everybody on the success of the homecoming demonstration. There were many happy men in the whole great assemblage. P. M. Lytle, for many years a member of the House and later surveyor of the port at Philadelphia, presided and in cordial, neighborly way, presented the guest of the evening. "This farmer's boy," said he, referring to the distinguished candidate's early struggles, "has become a man of approval of his neighbors and friends. Then in a most felicitous speech he told of Dr. Brumbaugh's career of usefulness and inspiration, and when he presented the Republic as a part of a physical and intellectual giant, the vast crowd was on its feet cheering, waving flags and singing with ex-lumber camp. You have seen me at sixteen teaching school at Center Union, a year later at Markleburg, and at twenty-two you elected me to the superintendency of your county schools. You saw me build my home any near my family. You have been in my classes at Juniata or have heard me in your schoolhouses and churches. We have hailed each other on the streets, in the highways and upon the threshold of your homes. You have always given me warmth and welcome to your fireside and family. God bless all of you.

Many Visitors
Among the many on the stage and in the audience who were responsible for the success of the great event was G. Chal Port, captain of the Middle Division police force of the Pennsylvania Railroad and the chief marshal of the parade; William Lauder, of the State Educational Board and author of the school code, who came from Riddelsburg with a large delegation of Bedford counties; H. H. Waite, a prominent lawyer, who subsequently acted as chairman of the overflow meeting on the diamond; Judge George B. Orady, of the Superior Court, another of the town's favorite sons; Louis G. Kolb, a prominent Philadelphia businessman and a neighbor of Dr. Brumbaugh in Germantown, who had come to see and participate in the reception of his townspeople; J. Lee Plummer and Jesse L. Hartman, of Hollidaysburg; Calvin Greene, a prominent tanner of Lewistown; State Senator Jones, of Altoona; District Attorney Patterson, of Harrisburg; ex-Congressman J. D. Hicks, J. L. Kurtz and scores of others from Blair county; George W. Fisher, the progressive and energetic lawyer; and many other prominent men of the town.

Dr. Brumbaugh's voice shook with emotion as he addressed the great throng gathered to greet him in his old home town. He said, in part: "My neighbors and friends of the dear old home valley: I cannot know with what depth of feeling I meet you here at home to-night. When I was considering the advisability of submitting my candidacy to the people of Pennsylvania at this primary election, the question in my mind was not, can I be nominated and elected, but it was this—what will the home folks think about it? For my friends, I would rather live in the enjoyment of your united regard and good will than in the possession of any preferment from the hands of the people at large. I could not think of leaving the heat of a partisan campaign any of the lifelong friends here at home. I love this dear old county, its hills and valleys, its farms and its firesides, its people who sleep in its cemeteries and its people who make it smile with the fruits of industry and with the rewards of honest endeavor. One can never be true to himself if he is not true to his neighbors and to his God.

Brumbaugh Outlines Policies to Neighbors

"You all know me well. You have seen me grow to manhood in your public schools and in Juniata College. You have seen me in the store, on the farm, at the mill, in the lumber camp. You have seen me at sixteen teaching school at Center Union, a year later at Markleburg, and at twenty-two you elected me to the superintendency of your county schools. You saw me build my home any near my family. You have been in my classes at Juniata or have heard me in your schoolhouses and churches. We have hailed each other on the streets, in the highways and upon the threshold of your homes. You have always given me warmth and welcome to your fireside and family. God bless all of you.

My chief concern was to have you decide for me whether or not I should lay aside my work as a teacher and offer my services to the people of this Commonwealth as its Governor?" He then outlined his platform as he submitted to the voters last Spring and said, in part: "I have a platform of fifty-three thousand good men of Pennsylvania in May endorsed that decision, and I am a candidate with convincing assurance of a triumphant election, and that, too, upon my own platform, written by myself and widely circulated before the primaries.

"You will be glad to know that the party platform at Pittsburgh two days ago cordially endorsed my candidacy and commended to the favor of the people of Pennsylvania the statements contained in my platform. "My platform is a consistent statement of the things for which I have always steadily stood. "I wish to think of Huntington as a typical center of agriculture and industrial endeavor in this Commonwealth."

"What is good here will be good in a large way in rural Pennsylvania. Having this in mind, I wish to declare to you my conviction that the first duty of our officials is to conserve the life and property of all citizens. We must, by law, maintain in the highest efficiency the quality of our citizens—moral, intellectual and physical."

"Whatever holds in its bosom the promise of help to our workers, men, women or children, whether that help be the increase of wages, their better education, their safety in toil, their protection and that of their loved ones from accident or sudden death, the increased comfort of their home life, their better health, their provision for wholesome, happy recreation or any other comfort or help that any effective legislation can secure, shall have my sympathy and support.

"The great corporations, employing thousands of our toilers, are increasingly insisting that their employees shall live soberly and economically. They have added to the moral and economic argument for such regulation of liquor traffic and will secure the highest efficiency of our workers. "For that reason and because of its moral meaning, I have declared for local option. "The people of this county have by a special law the privilege I would extend to the entire State. Let the entire issue be freely and fully met by the people, and let the issue rest with them.

"This is fundamental in the spirit of our institutions. In this stand I am confident I have your support and that all fair-minded citizens will be true to the people of this great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania."
