Dauphin, Pa., Aug. 31.—Despite the inclement weather, which interrupted a lawn fete on Saturday afternoon by the Sunday school school of Miss Bertha Sellers on the lawn of the home of Harvey C. Forney, the sum of $19 was cleared, but not until the lawn fete was turned into an indoor festival. The money was for the heating fund of the Dauphin Presbyterian Church. Long strings of Japanese lanterns had been festooned above the various booths during the afternoon and a bevy of young girls dressed in white were on hand to act as aids.

Sweeping from across the river, a severe thunderstorm suddenly descended upon the lawn fete. By FREDERICK PALMER

Copyright, 1914, by Charles Scribner Sons

At the far e park he saw another kind of dividend—another group of marching men. These were not in uniform. They were the unemworn, tired faces. Beside the flag of the country at the head of the procession was that of universal radicalism.

And his car had to stop to let them pass. For an instant the indignation of military autocracy rose strong within him at sight of the national colors in such company. But he noted how naturally the men kept step; the solidarity of their movement. The stamp of their army service in youth could not be easily removed. He realized the advantage of heading an army on a mixture of regulars and volunteers, but on universal conscription under discipline. These reservists, in the event of war, would hear the call of race and they would fight for the one flag that then had any significance. Yes, the old human impulses would predominate and the only enemy would be on the other side of the frontier. They would be pawns of his will-the will that Marta Galland had said would make him chief of staff.

Wasn't war the real cure for the general unrest? Wasn't the nation growing stale from the long peace? He was ready for war now that he had be come vice-chief, when the retirement of His Excellency, unable to bear the weight of his years and decorations in the field would make him the supreme commander. One ambition gained, he heard the appeal of another: to live to see the guns and rifles that had fired only blank cartridges in practice pouring out shells and bullets, and all the battalions that had played at sham war in maneuvers engaged in real war, under his direction. He saw his columns sweeping up the slopes of the Victory was certain, He Brown range. would be the first to lead a great modern army against a great modern army; his place as the master of modern tactics secure in the minds of all the soldiers of the world. The public would forget its unrest in the thrill of battles won and provinces conquered, and its clatter would be that of acclaim for a new idol of its old faith.

CHAPTER III.

Marta, when she had received the note from Westerling, had been in doubt as to her answer. Her curiosity to see him again was not of itself com pelling. The actual making of the prophecy was rather dim to her mind until he recalled it. She had heard of his rise and she had heard, too, things about him which a girl of twenty-seven can better understand than a girl of seventeen. His reason for wanting to see her he had said was to "renew an old acquaintance." He could have little interest in her, and her interest in him was that he was head of the Gray army. His work had intimate relation to that which the Marta of twentyseven, a Marta with a mission, had set for herself.

A page came to tell Westerling that Miss Galland would be down directly When she appeared she crossed the room with a flowing, spontaneous vital ity that appealed to him as something familiar.

"Ten years, isn't it?" she exclaimed as she seated herself on the other side of the tea-table. "And, let me see, you took two lumps, if I remember?" "None now," he said.

"Do you find it fattening?" she

"Since you've become such a great an?" she hazarded. "Is that too man?" she hazarded. strong?" This referred to the tea.
"No, just right!" he nodded.

He was studying her with the polite veiled scrutiny of a man of the world. A materialist, he would look a woman over as he would a soldier when he had been a major-general making an inspection. She was slim, supple; he liked slim, supple women. Yes, she was twenty-seven, with the vivacity of seventeen retained, though she were on the edge of being an old maid according to the conventional notions. Necks and shoulders that happened to be at his side at dinner, he had found, when they were really beautiful, were ative and discriminating admiration of physical charm. But he saw her shrug slightly and caught a spark from her eyes that made him vaguely con scious of an offense to her sensibilities, and he was wholly conscious that the suggestion, bringing his faculties up sharply, had the pleasure of a novel power to exercise was by proxy. This downright frankness was another reflection of the old days before he was at the apex of the pyramid. Now it was so unusual in his experience as to be almost a shock. On the point of arguing, he caught a mischievous, delightful "Isn't that so?" in her eyes, and replied:

"Yes, I shouldn't wonder if it were!" that brought every able-bodied man Why shouldn't he admit the truth to the one who had rung the bell of his secret ambition long ago by recogniz-ing in him the ability to reach his goal? He marvelled at her grasp of

"It wasn't so very hard to say, was it?" she asked happily, in response to his smile. Then, her gift of putting herself in another's place, while she strove to look at things with his purpose and vision, in full play, she went on in a different tone, as much to her; self as to him: "You have labored to ganization. You did not care for the non-essentials. You wanted the reality of shaping results.

"Yes, the results, the power!" he "Fifteen hundred regiments!" she continued thoughtfully, looking at a given point rather than at him. "Every regiment a blade which you would bring to an even sharpness! Every regiment a unit of a harmonious whole, knowing how to screen itself from fire and give fire as long as bidden, in answer to your will if war comes! That is what you live and plan for, isn't it?"

"Yes, exactly! Yes, you have it!" he said. His shoulders stiffened as he thrilled at seeing a picture of himself, as he wanted to see himself, done in bold strokes. It assured him that not only had his own mind grown beyond what were to him the narrow associations of his old La Tir days, but that hers had grown, too. "And you—what have you been doing all these years?" he asked

"Living the life of a woman on a country estate," she replied. "Since you made a rule that no Gray officers should cross the frontier we have been a little lonelier, having only the Brown officers to tea. Did you really find it so bad for discipline in your own she concluded with playful solemnity.

"One cannot consider individual cases in a general order," he explained.
"And, remember, the Browns made the ruling first. You see, every year means a tightening-yes, a tightening, as arms and armies grow more compli-cated and the maintaining of staff secrets more important. And you have been all the time at La Tir, truly? asked, changing the subject. He was convinced that she had acquired some thing that could not be gained on the outskirts of a provincial town

'No. I have traveled. I have been quite around the world."
"You have!" This explained much.

"How I envy you! That is a privilege I shall not know until I am superannu ated." While he should remain chief of staff he must be literally a prisoner in his own country.

"Yes, I should say it was splendid! Splendid—yes, indeed!" Snappy little nods of the head being unequal to expressing the joy of the memories that her exclamation evoked, she clasped her hands over her knees and swung back and forth in the ecstasy of seventeen, "Splendid! I should say so! She nestled the curling tip of her tongue against her teeth, as if the recollection must also be tasted. "Splendid, enchanting, enlightening, stupendous and wickedly expensive? Another girl and I did it all on our

"O-oh!" he exclaimed. "Oh, oh, oh!" she repeated after him. "Oh, what, please?"

"Oh, nothing!" he said. It was quite comprehensible to him how equipped she was to take care of her-

"What interested you most? What was the big lesson of all your journey ing?" he asked, ready to play the lis

"Being born and bred on a frontier. of an ancestry that was born and bred on a frontier, why, frontiers interested me most," she said. "I collected impressions of frontiers as some people collect pictures. I found them all alike -stupid, just stupid! Oh, so stupid!" Her frown grew with the repetition of the word; her fingers closed in on her palm in vexation. He recollected that he had seen her like this two or three times at La Tir, when he had found the outbursts most entertaining. He imagined that the small fist pressed against the table edge could deliver a stinging blow. "As stupid as it is for neighbors to quarrel! It put me at

"Apparently," he said. She withdrew her fist from the table, dropped the opened hand over the other on her knee, her body relaxing, her wrath passing into a kind of shamefacedness and then into a soft,

"I laugh at myself, at my own inconsistency," she said. "I was warlike against war. At all events, if there is anything to make a teacher of peace lose her temper it is the folly of frontiers.'

Terrific Storm Destroys Property at Penryn Park

Lebanon, Pa., Aug. 31. — Penryn Park, a pleasure resort in the heart of the South Mountains nine miles south of here, was swept Saturday night by a storm of cyclonic fury. Hundreds of trees were uprooted and hurled into Penryn Lake, boats and boathouses were blown into the woods. Fallen trees closed the Cornwall Railroad Company line for miles, and it was necessary to send out a relief train with a large force of men to clear the tracks of debris that the late train might reach this city.

The money loss at Penryn is considerable. Four miles across the Cornwall hills, at a point midway between Mount Gretna Park and Colebrook, the storm leveled trees and unroofed the homes of Charles Flory and H. John Beamesderfer. The Mount Gretna summer colony of 500 cottagers escaped the fury of the storm.
