for yours this Season."

"Nix on that Economy Stuff," replied the Older Daughter. "I apprehend that there is Nothing Doing in Town in Summer, and so it's me for the Mountains, where I can Write Back how I am Sleeping under a Blanket in July. Besides, Summer is the Open Season for the Matrimonial Hunt, and when a Young Woman has Collected as many Birthdays as I have it behooves her to be Hot on the Trail."

Trail."
"Your Words are Words of Wisdom," grouned the Poor Father, "yet how I am to Get a Bank Roll to Stake you in the Game is a Conundrum that gives me the Willies to Contemplate."
"Cont. the Appropriation in Half,"

how I am to Get a Bank Roll to Stake you In the Game is a Conundrum that gives me the Willes to Contemplate."

"Cut the Appropriation in Half," said the Second Daughter, turning a Sympathetic Look upon her Father, "for I will remain at Home, and Wear my Old Clothes, while Sister Dolls herself up in the Glad Rags at Fashionable Summer Resorts."

Thereupon the Old Sister Fared Forth, and began Playing the Big Time at the Swell Summer Joints. She would change her Clothes 'steen times a Day for the Inspection of the Old Cats who sat upon the Hotel Veranda and Clawed to Pleces the Looks and Reputation of every Pulchritudinous Woman that passed with other Maidens, than which there is no Sadder Sight on Earth.

But she did not Grab Off any Engagement Ring, for the Excellent Reason that the only Men in Sight were either Dotty old Grandpas who were already tied up with an Ample Sufficiency of Wife, or else they were Schoolboys with an Allowance of $1.50 a Week for Spending Money.

In the meantime the Good Sister who had Remained at Home in the City was having an Uproarious Time, because while Most of the Girls in their Set had gone away for the Summer, all of the Men were still Attending to Business at the Old Stand. Therefore, she had a Monopoly which she Proceeded to Work in a Way that showed that Rockefeller will have Nothing on Women when they get the Chance.

Daily and Nightly her Door was Besieged by Youths with Automobiles, and Motor Boats, and the Price of Roof Gardens in their Pockets, and as she always said that she Preferred the City in Summer, and did not think it At All Warm, three Misguided Young Men asked her Hand in Marriage, under the Delusion that she would Hold the same Views after she was Wed.

"And they will come some time," private feelings as of anybody's.

Stransky squinted his eyes down the

"We gain nothing if we beat them back. War will be the ruin of busi-ness," said the banker's son.

"Yes, we are prosperous now. Let well enough alone!" said the manufacsaid the laborer's son, "but I am thinking it's a poor way of raising your pay.

"There won't be any war." said the banker's son. "There can't be without credit. The banking interests will not permit it."

"There can always be war," said the judge's son, "always when one people determines to strike at another people

-even if it brings bankruptcy."
"It would be a war that would make all others in history a mere exchange of skirmishes. Every able-bodied man in line-automatics a hundred shots a minute—guns a dozen shots a minute—and aeroplanes and dirigibles!" said the manufacturer's son.

To the death, too!" 'And not for glory! We of the 53d who live on the frontier will be fighting for our homes."

"If we lose them we'll never get them back. Better die than be beaten! Herbert Stransky, with deep-set eyes, slightly equinting inward, and a heavy jaw, an enormous man who was he cared to be, had listened in silence to the others, his rather thick but ex pressive lips curving with cynicism.

His only speech all the morning had been in the midst of the reception in the public square of the town when he said:

"This home-coming doesn't mean much to me. Home? Hell! The hedgerows of the world are my home!"

He appeared older than his years, and hard and bitter, except when his eyes would light with a feverish sort of fire which shone as he broke into a lull in the talk.

"Comrades," he began. Tory exclaimed.

"No, the anarchist!" shouted a Socialist.

"There won't be any war!" said Stransky, his voice gradually rising to the pitch of an agitator reliebing the sensation of his own words. "Patriotism is the played-out trick of the ruling classes to keep down the proletariat. There won't be any war! Why? Be-cause there are too many enlightened men on both sides who do the world's work. We of the 53d are a provincial lot, but throughout our army there are thousands upon thousands like me. They march, they drill, but when battle comes they will refuse to fight—my comrades in heart, to whom the flag of this country means no more than that of any other country!"

"Hold on! The flag is sacred!" cried the banker's son. "Yes, that will do!"

"Shut up!"

Other voices formed a chorus of

"I knew you thought it; now I've caught you!" This from the sergeen; This from the sergeant, who had seen hard fighting against a savage foe in Africa and there-fore was particularly bitter about the Bodlapoo affair. The welt of a scar on the gaunt, fever-yellowed cheek turned a deeper red as he seized Stransky by the collar of the blouse.

Stransky raised his free hand as if to strike, but paused as he faced the company's boyish captain, slender of figure, aristocratic of feature. His in-dignation was as evident as the sergeant's, but he was biting

"You heard what he said, sir?"

"The latter part—enough!"
"It's incitation to mutiny! An example!"

"Yes, put him under arrest." The sergeant still held fast to the collar of Stransky's blouse. Stransky could have shaken himself free, as a mastiff frees himself from a puppy but this was resistance to arrest and he had not yet made up his mind to go that far. His muscles were weaving under the sergeant's grip, his eyes on the madness of impulse for eruption. "I wonder if it is really worth while to put him under arrest?" said some one at the edge of the group in amiable glowing as with volcanic fire waiting inquiry. The voice came from an officer of about thirty-five, who apparently had strolled over from a near-by aeroplane station to look at the regiment. From his shoulder hung the gold cords of the staff. It was Col. Arthur Lanstron, whose plane had skimmed the Gallands' garden wall for the "easy bump" ten years ago. There was something more than mere titular respect in the way the young captain saluted -admiration and the diffident, boyish glance of recognition which does not presume to take the lead in recalling a slight acquaintance with a man of "Dellarme! It's all of two years since we met at Miss Gallan's, isn't it?" Lanstron said, shaking hands with the captain. "Yes, just before we were ordered south," said Dellarme, obviously south," said Dellarme, obviously pleased to be remembered.

"I overheard your speech," Lanstron continued, nodding toward Stransky.

ing around Stransky, and in the front "Eighty million people to our fifty rank was Grandfether Fragini.

"Said our flag was no better'n any other flag, did he?" piped the old man. "Beat him to a pulp! That's what the Hussars would have done."

"The right!"
"Let them come!" said the butcher's lic, Stransky, I should like to know your origin," said Lanstron, prepared to be as considerate of an anarchist's to be as considerate of an anarchist's bony bridge of his nose and grinned sardonically. "That won't take long," he answered.

"My father, so far as I could identify him, died in jail and my mother of "That was hardly to the purple!" observed Lanstron thoughtful "No, to the red!" answered Strancky "I mean that it was hardly inclined to make you take a roseate view of life as a beautiful thing in a well-ordered world where favors of fortune are evenly distributed," continued Lan-hope of a new order of things-the recreation of society!" Stransky ut-tered the sentiment with the triumphant pride of a pupil who knows his text-book thoroughly. By this time the colonel commanding the regiment, who had noticed the excitement from a distance, appeared, forcing a gap for his passage through the crowd with sharp words. He, too, recognized Lanstron. After they had shaken hands, the colonel scowled as he heard the situation explained, with the old sergeant, still holding fast to Stransky's collar, a capable and insistent witness for the prosecution; while Stransky, the fire in his eyes dying to coals, stated straight ahead.

"It is only a suggestion, of course," said Lanstron, speaking quite as ctator to avoid the least indication of interference with the colonel's authority, "but it seems possible that Stransky has clothed his wrongs in a garb that could never set well on his nature if he tried to wear it in practice. He is really an individualist. Enraged, he would fight well. I should like nothing better than a force of Stranskys if I had to defend a redoubt

"Yes, he might fight." The colonel looked hard at Stransky's rigid profile, with its tight lips and chin as firm as "Let us hear from the Socialist!" a if cut out of stone. "You never know who will fight in the pinch, they say. But that's speculation. It's tample that I have to deal with."

"He is not of the insidious, plotting He spoke his mind openly," suggested Lanstron. "If you give him the limit of the law, why, he becomes a martyr to persecution. I should say that his remarks might pass for barrack-room gassing.'

"Very well," said the colonel, taking the shortest way out of the difficulty.

"We will excuse the first offense."
"Yes, sir!" said the sergeant mechanically as he released his grip of the offender. "We had two anarchists in my company in Africa." he observed in loyal agreement with orders. "They fought like devils. The only trouble was to keep them from shooting innocent natives for sport.'

Stransky's collar was still crumpled on the nape of his neck. He remained stock-still, staring down the bridge of his nose. For a full minute he did not vouchsafe so much as a glance upward over the change in his fortunes. Then he looked around at Lanstron glower

"I know who you are!" he said. "You were born in the purple. have had education, opportunity, position-everything that you and your kind want to keep for your kind. You are smarter than the others. would hang a man with spider webs instead of hemp. But I won't fight for you! No, I won't!" He threw back his head with a determination in his defiance so intense that it had a certain kind of dignity that freed it of theatrical affectation.

"Yes, I was fortunate; but perhaps nature was not altogether unkind to you," said Lanstron. "In Napoleonic times, Stransky, I think you might even have carried a marshal's baton in

"You-what rot!" A sort of triumph played around Stransky's full lips and his jaw shot out challengingly. "No, never against my comrades on the other side of the border!" he concluded, his dogged stare returning.

Now the colonel gave the order to fall in; the bugle sounded and the cen-tipede's legs began to assemble on the road. But Stransky remained a statue, his rifle untouched on the sward. He seemed of a mind to let the regiment "Stransky, fall in!" called the ser-

Still Stransky did not move. A comrade picked up the rifle and fairly thrust it into his hands.

"Come on, Bert, and knead dough with the rest of us!" he whispered. "Come on! Cheer up!" Evidently his comrades liked Stransky. "No!" roared Stransky, bringing the rifle down on the ground with a heavy

DRAPED TUNICS ARE NEW AND SMART FOR EVENING GOWNS

One of the Prettiest Skirts of Opening Season

By MAY MANTON

8366 Draped Skirt, 24 to 32 waist.

The draped tunic is one of the newest and prettiest developments of that favorite model, the prettiest for dressy costumes whether designed for afternoon or evening wear. This one is eminently graceful and, since the foundation skirt can be cut in any desired length, it is adapted to the opera and to dinner as well as to the fascinating dance. In the illustration, it is made of charmeuse satin with the tunic or over-drapery of chiffon with a lace frill but, since all fashionable materials are soft, they all drape effectively and, consequently, there are many that can be used. The soft taffetas are to be smart throughout the season, charmeuse promises to be much worn and crêpe effects continue all their vogue. The foundation skirt is made in two pieces with the drapery arranged over it. The finish may be made at either the high or the natural waist line.

For the medium size, the skirt with train will require $1/2 yds. of material 27, 6 yds. 36, 4% yds. 44 in. wide; the skirt without train 7 yds. 27, 5/4 yds. 36, 4 yds. 44 in. wide; the skirt in round length is 2 yds.

The pattern 8366 is cut in sizes from 24 to 32 inches waist measure. It will be mailed to any address by the Fashion Department of this paper, on receipt of ten cents.
