THE LATEST TUNIC SKIRT FOR YOUNG GIRLS

A Model That is Adapted to Remaking as Well as to New Frocks

By MAY MANTON

8363 Two-Piece Skirt with Tunic for Misses and Small Women, 16 and 18

This plain circular tunic is apt to be effective over a skirt of contrasting material and the greater number of girls unquestionably will like that treatment, but there never was a fashion more practical or more adaptable than the tunic skirt, and this model can be treated in many different ways. Since the foundation is just a plain two-piec skirt over tion is just a plain two-piece skirt over which the tunic is arranged, it is easy to which the tunic is arranged, it is easy to see that it is adapted to remodelling as well as to the new frock and the autumn has brought forth so many new and interesting materials that it is a simple matter to find something to harmonize with almost any costume that may need to be remodelled. There are striped and checked and various fancy materials while again silk is combined with wool and silks include moiré and plain effects as well as plain surfaces. The tunic is made in three pieces and both it and the skirt can be closed at the left of the front, where the edges of the tunic overlap, or at the left side seam.

"A man playing deaf; a secret telephone installed on our premises without our consent-this is all I know so far," said Marta, seated opposite Lanstron at one end of the circular seat in the arbor of Mercury.

"Of course, with our 3,000,000 against their 5,000,000, the Grays will take the offensive," he said. "For us, the defensive. La Tir is in an angle. It does not belong in the permanent tactical line of our defenses. Nevertheless, there will be hard fighting here. The Browns will fall back step by step, and we mean, with relatively small cost to ourselves. 'o make the Grays pay a heavy price for each step -just as heavy as we can."
"You need not use euphonious terms," she said without lifting her lashes or any movement except a quick, nervous gesture of her free "What you mean is that you will kill as many as possible of the Grays, isn't is? And if you could kill five for every man you lost, that would be splendid, wouldn't it?"

"I don't think of it as splendid. There is nothing splendid about war," he ob-

"And after you have made them pay five to one or ten to one in human lives for the tangent, what then? Go on! I want to look at war face to face free of the will-o'-the-wisp glamour that draws on soldiers."

"We fall back to our first line of dedense, fighting all the time. The Grays occupy La Tir, which will be out of the reach of our guns. Your house will no longer be in danger, and we happen to know that Westerling means to make it his headquarters.'

"Our house Westerling's headquarters!" she repeated. With a start that brought her up erect, alert, challenging, her lashes flickering, she recalled that Westerling had said at parting that he should see her if war came. This corroborated Lanstron's informa One side wanted a spy in the garden; the other a general in the house. Was she expected to make a choice? He had ceased to be Lanny. He personified war. Westerling personified war. "I suppose you have spies under his very nose—in his very staff offices?" she asked.

"What a pretty example of trust among civilized nations!" she exclaimed. "You say that Westerling, who commands the killing on his side, will be in no danger. "An autocracy, a tyranny over the lives of all the adult males in countries that boast of the ballot and self-gov-erning institutions!" she put in.

"But I hope," he went on, with the quickening pulse and eager smile that the fighting." used to greet a call from Feller to "set things going" in their cadet days, "that ing before," she said, with a gesture of I may take out a squadron of dirigibles. impatience.

"And if you caught a regiment in close formation with a shower of "Aren't you willing to leave even that bombs, that would be positively heav-enly, wouldn't it?" She bent nearer to him, her eyes flaming demand and

"No! War-necessary, horrible, hell-ish!" he replied. Something in her seemed to draw out the brutal truth ! she had asked for in place of euphonious terms. "When I became chief of intelligence

I found that an underground wire had been laid to the castle from the Eighth division headquarters, which will be our general staff headquarters in time of war. The purpose was the same as now, but abandoned as chimerical. All that was necessary was to install the instrument, which Feller did. I, too, saw the plan as chimerical, yet it was a chance—the one out of a thousand. If it should happen to succeed we should play with our cards concealed and theirs on the table.

"The rest of Feller's part you have guessed already," he concluded. can see how a deaf, inoffensive old gardener would hardly seem to know a Gray soldier from a Brown; how it might no more occur to Westerling to send him away than the family dog or cat; how he might retain his quarters in the tower; how he could judge the atmosphere of the staff, whether elated or depressed, pick up scraps of conversation, and, as a trained officer, know the value of what he heard and report it over the phone to Partow's headquarters."

"But what about the aeroplanes?" she asked. "I thought you were to depend on them for scouting."

"We shall use them, but they are the least tried of all the new resources," he said. "A Gray aeroplane may cut a Brown aeroplane down before it returns with the news we want."

At most when the release we want. At most, when the aviator may descend low enough for accurate observation low enough for accurate observation he can see only what is actually being done. Feller would know Westerling's plans before they were even in the first steps of execution. This —playing the thought happily—"this would be the ideal arrangement, while our planes and dirigibles were kept over

She threw back her arms, her head raised, with a certain abandon as if she would bare her heart.

"Lanny, there have been moments when I would have liked to fly to your arms. There have been moments when I have had the call that comes to every woman in answer to a desire. Yet I was not ready. When I really go it must be in a flame, in answer to your flame!"

But if the flame were about to burst forth she smothered it in the spark. "And all this has upset me," went on incoherently. "We've both been cruel without meaning to be, and we're in the shadow of a nightmare; and next time you come perhaps all the war talk will be over and—oh,
