Lad Will Likely Recover; Animal Gores Farmer in Fight in Barnyard

Several farm hands armed with pitchforks battled for a half an hour yesterday afternoon with an enraged bull in the barn on the Motter farm near Highspire to prevent it from goring to death Eugene Book, a 15-year-old youth.

Young Book is employed by Peter Jacobs, tennant on the farm to do chores about the place. Yesterday afternoon he went to the barn to feed the stock and noticed that the bull was loose. He opened the barn door and attempted to tie the animal. As he stepped through the door the bull made a mad rush towards him. Before he had taken a step the animal struck him and crushed him to the floor, plunging one horn deep into the youth's neck and probably injuring him internally.

Jacobs, the farmer, saw the attack and rushed to the boy's aid. The enraged animal turned on him and before the farmer could save himself, cut several deep gashes in his arms and chest. Grabbing a pitchfork and calling for help, Jacobs me the repeated rushes of the bull. Several farm hands worked nalf an hour before the bull was tied.

Young Book was taken to the office of Dr. W. B. Kirkpatrick, highspire, where it was found that he had a wound three inches deep in his neck. He was taken to the Harrisburg Hospital where an operation was performed last night. To-day the youth is resting well and will likely recover.
