Married Life

With a roar the train pulled into the Grand Central, and Warren seized the sultcase and Helen's long coat and made for the end of the car. Helen followed him, searching in her hand bag for the tin powder case that she always carried with her.

The trip had been very warm from Providence and she had meant to go into the dressing room to tidy her hair and put on some powder before they arrived in New York, but Warren had interested her in a magazine articid just as she had planned to go and then it had been too late.

"Come on," said Warren, turning around as they reached the door. "So that's what you are up to? Didn't you have time enough to do that before we arrived in the station? That's always the way with you, and then you wonder why you are never on time for an appointment.

Helen, having extricated the box from the litter of things that filled the hand bag, powdered her nose liberally and followed Warren out of the train and along the platform without replying to his remark on her punctuality.

"Porter, sir, porter!" And an ebony faced official in the livery of the station appeared and took the things from Warren's arm.

"To think the best thing to do is to have something to eat right here in the station," said Warren, turning to Helen as he relinquished the bag and coat.

"But I wrote to Nora that we were coming in on this train and she will probably have things all ready for us."

"Did you tell her to have supper "No, but I said we would be home at § o'clock and to have things ready for us." She'll have the bouse opened and something ready. I'm sure, and you know how disappointed she'll be five don't eat anything.

Warren as he seed that two would be home at § o'clock and to have things ready for us. She'll have the bouse opened and something ready. I'm sure, and you know how disappointed she'll be five don't eat anything."

Warren, how can you be so unjust? How could it let that Mr. Raymond would carry the letter around and not made the prospects of Nora's tempting in the prospects of Nora's tempting in the station," said Warren, turning to Helen as he relinquished the bag and coat.

"But I wrote to Nora that we were coming in on this train and she will probably have things all ready for us."

"Did you tell her to have supper ready?"

"No, but I said we would be home at 8 o'clock and to have things ready for us. She'll have the house opened and something ready. I'm sure, and you know how disappointed she'll be if we don't eat anything."

Warren growled out something unintelligible. Evidently the restaurant appealed to him and he was very hurgry, thought Helen, as she looked at him sideways. He had wanted her to go into the diner, but she had refused. The idea of a course dinner fidd not appeal to her at all and she was relying upon Nora to have something ready for them. Perhaps Warren would rather not wait, though; she hated to be selfish about things.

"Let's have something to eat here if you'd rather, dear. It doesn't make any difference to me."

"Changed your mind, eh? Well, I guess we'll go right on home. You is the station, won't you?"

"Warren, I wanted to go back, eh? Yes, after you had determined to ge back, eh? Yes, after you had determined to ge back, eh? Yes, after you had determined to ge back, eh? Yes, after you had determined to ge back, eh? Yes, after you had determined to ge back, eh? Yes, after you had determined to ge back, eh? Yes, after you had determined to ge back, eh? Yes, after you had determined to ge back, eh? Yes, after you had determined to ge back, eh? Yes, after you had determined to ge back, eh? Yes, after you had determined to ge back, eh? Yes, after you had determined to ge back, eh? Yes, after you had determined to ge back, eh? Yes, after you had determined to ge back, eh? Yes, after you had determined to ge back, eh? Yes, after you had determined to ge back, eh? Yes, after you had determined to ge back, eh? Yes, after you had determined to ge back, aday or so before we arrived, if you remember."

Warren, bitings all relitant for the prospects of Nora's tempting meal."

ell, it's too late now, anyway; nope she has a nice little supper for us. Anyway it won't take ong to fix us something."

len had a vasue feeling that swere not going to be as smooth he had expected, and as they left subway and proceeded toward apartment the first thing that her eyes was a row of unlighted ows. She looked furtively at Warbut he had not glanced at the e. Why hadn't Nora lighted the in the living room? She had in her letter to have everything for them. Perhaps, though, the was early and Nora, busy in the hen, had not realized how late it.

Yora hasn't lighted up yet," she ing ready for them. Perhaps ware in would rather not wait, though, he hated to be selfish about things. "Let's have something to eat here you'd rather, dear. It doesn't make not difference to me."

"Changed your mind, ch? Well, I was well go right on home. You'd go out something to eathers we'll go right on home. You'd go out something to was we'll go right on home. You hight as well have your own way bout it; you always do."

The porter was making his way sward the concourse without so much sturning around.

"Hey, porter, we want to go to the obway." called Warren.

Helen felt rather guilty about hings. Warren always made her feel way about it whenever he gave what he called her own way. She ondered sometimes if she could be selfish as he represented her. And nok the things from the porter she astened after him into the waiting spress.

"We might have telephoned up to for the seating was the state of the station." "That's a fine idea," contemptuously. "The worst thing in the world that anyone can do is to go purposely or for any reason without a meal. That's the reason I wanted to have dinner on the train."

Warren picked up his hat and reached up to turn out the electric light. At the same time the latch clicked and a moment later Nora walked into the room, a large bundle under one arm and her bag in the other.

"Well, come on, we might as well go out and have it over with. You've got to have something to eat or you'll have one of your headaches."

"I'm not a bit hungry, dear. If you're else the manufacturer could not afford to spend large sums of money for the advertising, and to attach his name and reputation to an article that was not extraordinarily meritorious, for it is the repeat sales that he depends on. It is therefore quite evident that when an article is nationally advertised and nationally sold, year in and year out, year after year, it is exceptionally good goods to stand the test and prove worthy of continued sales and growth. It is conceded by experts that when an article is advertised generally—nationally—it is the best possible product. The wise always, in consequence, prefer nationally known goods and ask for what they want by name. Read the magazines and keep posted on nationally advertised goods.

FOR AUTUMN FROCKS

While sleeping in a pile of rubbish along the Reading Railway yesterday, William Hawkins, colored, narrowly escaped burning to death. The fire had started in the rubbish and Hawkins' clothes caught fire. He extinguished the flames after being severely burned about the face and body.

An alarm was sent in at Box No. 13, Race and Paxton streets, but before the firemen arrived a bucket brigade had been formed and the flames were extinguished.
