ROTARY CLUB HEARS OF PIANO MAKING

Frederick P. Stieff, Jr., of Baltimore, Delivers Lecture to Members

ACTION ON WHARTON SCHOOL

The Harrisburg Rotary Club was entertained last evening by L. Frank Bass, Harrisburg manager for the Stieff piano firm, at the store, 24 North Second street. After taking a look at the $11,000 gold Rotary wheel of the California club, the members listened to a very excellent illustrated lecture on piano making by Frederick P. Stieff, Jr., of Baltimore, counsellor member of the Stieff firm. Newell Albright, the well-known pianist, entertained with several well executed numbers and refreshments were served.

The committee appointed to work for the establishment of a branch of the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania in Harrisburg reported that its campaign is progressing favorably and it was continued.

Urges Club to Work

Dr. Samuel Z. Shupe, the eye, ear and throat specialist, who is himself a graduate of the University, and who worked his way through college, presented in the Telegraph, the following urgent appeal to the club to do its level best to bring the Wharton School to Harrisburg:

"Time was when the approaches to our universities were barred by unsurmountable, impregnable fortifications which no one might enter except the patrician who could afford a tallisman—station, money and leisure.

"As some of us have reason to know and be thankful, these medieval ideas in institutions of learning have been gradually replaced by the broad principle of the greatest good to the greatest number.

"The college professor has come down out of the serene heights of purely academic abstractions and proceeds to help the 'common people' with his applied sciences. What is the result, or example, in agriculture?

"For centuries men practiced agriculture with but slight change from the methods of the Egyptians, and that has been changed by the college professor and his habit of prying open what were once thought to be the impenetrable secrets of nature. The college professor has left nature very few secrets. Famines, due to the lack of chemistry of the soil, no longer occur in civilized countries. Productivity has been doubled, land thought to be worthless has been reclaimed and made valuable; plants despised as weeds have been given a market value.

"A few years ago the college professor invaded another domain, viz., the business world, and endeavored to reclaim and render fertile and productive the routine-bound brain of the office worker.

"At the inception of this new educational enterprise, the professor endeavored to show that business is a profession quite as much as medicine, law, theology or engineering, and that to meet the demands which modern business imposes upon its followers, thorough and specialized instruction is necessary. Formerly such instruction was given in the form of a night school of experience was all that was necessary to make a successful business man, but in this day of opportunities this is entirely inadequate to make anything of a man but a routine laborer, destined sooner or later for the scrap heap. Why? Because the young man in the employ of even the most progressive and successful business firm in this city is so occupied with and limited to the details of one of a thousand branches of his firm's activities, that he has no time or opportunity to become acquainted with the basic principles underlying the business as a whole, and consequently he never is able to work out any of the great problems connected therewith. His relation to the business as a whole is like that of a man placed immediately in front of a building architecturally grand, but who would not be able to tell of but a few square feet or yards at most, but would miss the beauty, the broad fine lines of the structure, and entirely, would know nothing of the co-relation of the many parts that make up the main design.

University Co-operates

"Realizing this condition, the University of Pennsylvania declared herself ready and anxious to cultivate close and constant contact with business men; that she wanted to fit in and serve the daily life of the community.

"To this end the Wharton School of Finance was established and the results of the business course are so apparent, not so well known to the general public, are just as marvelous as those in agriculture and engineering.

"The next step was to make such instruction available to the man who was actively engaged in business and could not devote his daylight hours to a university course. The night school in Philadelphia met this need. How admirably it did so you may judge by reading the booklet entitled, 'The Money Value of a College Education.'

"Feeling that the opportunity due to the State of Pennsylvania outside of Philadelphia and realizing that thousands of men would gladly avail themselves of the broadening influence of a course in the night branch of the Wharton School of Finance, and that these were denied the privilege because unable to go to Philadelphia, the university authorities decided that, inasmuch as the mountain could not come to Mohammed, Mohammed would go to the mountain; so they picked up

"So prolonged a state of wide-spread war, involving half of Europe and every European Colony, opened extraordinary opportunities for NEUTRAL TRADE, which the Americans were well prepared to improve. They entered the field with eager enterprise and MADE IT ALMOST THEIR OWN. Their ships swarmed in every sea and their flag became familiar in every port." product sent to it as a representative of your industry; sending them back to you, broadened in self-confidence, efficient servers, fired with determination to serve best, with the assurance that the 'boss' will see to it that the profits most who serves best, without any scheming or conniving on the part of the employees. As a result (if you will take the most candid view and reckon success only in terms of dollars and cents), up go your common stock values and your dividends.

"It will benefit the city of Harrisburg by letting loose upon it hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of profits and practice the doctrine that virtue is founded in utility; citizens who will realize the possibilities of a richer, happier, more satisfactory life in the performance of the tasks with which they are already familiar, instead of wasting their time and making themselves and all around them miserable, by fretting, like a spoiled boy, after the unattainable. Even Rotarians, however imbued with civic pride, could ask no greater boon.

"It will benefit the whole Commonwealth by encouraging other cities to go and do likewise which will result in the transformation of thousands of dissatisfied workers into contented, useful citizens who will realize that it devolves upon them to produce the results if they and their posterity are to enjoy the blessings of peace and prosperity.

"Other States, seeing our marvelous progress, will seek to learn the cause, and having found it will vie with each other to emulate the Keystone State. The whole nation will eventually be immeasurably benefited by the service the Harrisburg Rotary Club renders in establishing this branch of the University of Pennsylvania Wharton School of Finance."

Let Them Learn History From a Master Historian

Larned's History of the World is his latest work, and a veritable monument to his genius and learning. He is the author of the world-famous History for Ready Reference, which has gone into every school, college and public library in this country, and which some librarians say is worn out by constant handling quicker than any other reference book on their shelves. With the handsome set of five volumes, one really needs no other history in his library. It covers 7,000 years of

$75,000 FOR 15 CENTS EACH MONTH

We have broken away from the tradition that women wish to read only milk-and-water, weak, wishy-washy fiction. That is why men do not read the so-called "women's magazines." Men demand action, adventure, love, mystery—"something going on" in their stories and so do women, we believe. Furthermore, people do not wish to read stories which are strung out through nine or ten long weary months with only a page or two in each issue.

Our serials in future will be notable for real, genuine interest and there will be four each year. The four stories for the next twelve months cost us $75,000.00. You get them complete by paying only fifteen cents each month to your newsdealer. A corking good mystery story by Maximilian Foster begins in the October number—now on sale. Get it and you'll thank us for telling you.
