Boys Set Fire to Walnut Tree Survivors of One Hundred and More Than Century

Special to The Telegraph

Dauphin, Pa., Sept. 16.—An old landmark, of Dauphin, a black walnut tree, over one hundred years old, standing at the head of Market Square was set on fire at noon esterday by was set on fire at noon esterday by two small boys who were playing with coal oil and matches. The boys poured the oil on the roots of the tree and then touched it with a lighted match. A fire sprung up immediately and spread to the inside of the tree where it burned all day. The Rev. Robert F. Stirling, Guy Walters and David Garman, living near, bored holes in the tree, which is hollow, and put a long water hose through. During the afternoon the village hose cart, pulled by several boys, arrived on the scene of action, but their efforts were in vain.

In vain.

Towards evening the fire began to lessen and by 8 o'clock was entirely out. It is feared that the old tree will have to be chopped down, because of the damage done by the fire. If this is done it will be to the sorrow of all Dauphin, because its very oldest as well as youngest have played under or enjoyed the shade of its enormous branches.

To do this get about two ounces of plain powdered neroxin from any drus, store—sprinkle a little on a flot wesponge—rub over the blackheads, little olack-heads no matter where they become hard. The powdered neroxin and the body that form in the pores of the skin—pinching and squeezing only cause irritation, make large pores, and on 10 get them out after they become hard. Aakford, who was killed at Antietam, will arrive in this city, this evening and go to Sharpsburg to attend the fifty-second reunion on the battlefield. The regiment's position on the battlefield is marked by a broken flagstaff monument, which stands on the right side of Bloody Lane, where the Confederate and Union dead were piled three and four deep. The regiment was severely engaged in the battle of over half a century ago and captured over 300 Confederate prisoners during their retreat from a stone wall near the sunken road, or Bloody Lane, at the point of the bayonet, and after five hours of hard fighting planted their flag in advance of all others. This was the first battle in which the regiment was engaged, having been in service only a few weeks. Colonel Aakford was succeeded by Colonel Vinton M. Wilcox.

HEAVY TRIAL LIST

referred to the preceding day's developments said that the enemy showed a disposition to resist north of the Aisne river. Yesterday's official communication said that the enemy resisted on the line from Craonne and the forest of L'Aigle, north of Compiegne. The forces that constituted the center in the battle of Marne seem also to be seeking a position on the same line while the Crown Prince's army in Argonne continues to retreat in that direction.

It remains to be seen whether under the adverse conditions the Germans have been able to get their artillery into position through the mud. The situation would be desperate in case of defeat for the heavy rains continue and under the circumstances the Germans could hardly get their heavy artillery away.

It was rumored last night that the Indian cavalry had arrived and vould go into action. This is unconfirmed, however. Special to The Telegraph

There could be no doubt, however, that he was greatly disappointed over the poor showing made by his party in Maine. Concerning the action of the Progressives in New York county in bringing about fusion with the Republicans on several candidates, Colonel Roosevelt had this to say:

"Of course, I endorse whatever action the party has taken, I am with those who arranged for fusion and also for Michael Schaap, leader of the Progressives in the Assembly. I think he has done splendid service since he was put into office."
