Another Woman's Case.

Providence, R. I.—"I cannot speak too highly of your Vegetable Compound as it has done wonders for me and I would not be without it. I had a displacement, bearing down, and backache, until I could hardly stand, and was thoroughly run down when I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It helped me and I am in the best of health at present. I work in a factory all day long besides doing my housework so you can see what it has done for me. I give you permission to publish my name and I speak of your Vegetable Compound to many of my friends." —Mrs. ABRIL LAWSON, 126 Lippitt St., Providence, R. I.

Aunt Este's Stories For Children

Aunt Este herewith begins a new series of short stories to be published in the Telegraph every Saturday. To preserve them in book form cut out the cover page and picture in one piece. Fold them in the middle for a cover and inside paste the story, also folded in the middle. Repeat each week and at the close of the series you will have a complete book of stories.

Illustration for Aunt Este's stories showing a man and a woman in a boat on a river.

My dear little ones: During the next six weeks Aunt Este is going to tell you a real funny fairy tale about two venturesome little fish. It will be a sort of a continued story, so be sure to save all the copies—and you will have the whole thing when you are through pasting them into your book. You see the picture of the fish. —but there! I am not going to tell you the story before I begin. The Amazing Adventures of the Tiddeley Twins SCARE NUMBER ONE. Once upon a time, away far across the sea in the Black Forest, where one time a way far across the sea in the Black Forest, river rises, lived two little fish. They were the sauciest, most adventuresome little fish that had ever been born in the waters of the Black Forest. Their mother could do nothing with them, and their father could do nothing with them. One day Mother Fish, whose name was Mrs. Tiddeley, said to Father Fish: "I think the best thing we can do with Winks and Wee is to send them out into the world and let them learn for themselves." And Father Tiddeley agreed. So one fine morning the whole Tiddeley family watched Tiddeley Winks and Tiddeley Wee swim off into the great, great world. There was a real tear in Mamma Tiddeley's eyes, for she knew that was the last she would ever see of the twins. But Father Tiddeley said they were saucy at their best and it would do them good to have some of the smartness rubbed off of them. Down, down the little stream through the Black Forest they swam, as silently and swiftly as little fish could. At last they reached the great Danube river—still they swam on, taking in all the sights, popping up every now and then to see what was going on in the great world round about them. Through the Southern part of Germany they traveled looking around at all the wonderful industries of that wonderful land. Down, down they went through Austria-Hungary. At last they found a beautiful spot. On the one side was Austria, on the other side Servia, and here they decided to live. "This suits me," said Tiddeley Winks. "This suits me," said Tiddeley Wee. So they played around with the little fish and with the big fish in the great Danube river. "See," said the Tiddeley Twins, "we know what we wanted. That old mountain stream up there in the Black Forest was too slow for us. We're in the world, down here." "But we won't go any farther, will we?" asked Tiddeley Wee, who was not quite so venturesome as his brother. "My fins are getting tired." "All right," said Tiddeley Winks. "We'll settle here." But neither Tiddeley Winks nor Tiddeley Wee knew what they were talking about. You see the very next day a great big fish darted right and left, troubling all the waters. "Have you heard the news? Have you heard the news?" shouted he. "The Servians have killed the Crown Prince of Austria. That means troubled times for these waters. We had better all away to sea." "To sea?" moaned Tiddeley Winks. "To sea?" echoed Tiddeley Wee. "Yes, the great Black Sea," answered the big fish. "We can lose ourselves in those waters. But here—ugh, I don't want to be around any water in times of war." So the Tiddeley Twins started off once more. Faster and faster they swam, only sticking their heads out once in awhile to hear more trouble, and the echoes of guns, and trying to get under water to keep away from the big ships which plowed along. At last they reached a great roaring body of water. "We have reached the sea," said Tiddeley Winks. "The great Black Sea," said Tiddeley Wee. "I'm afraid of sharks," said Tiddeley Wee. "I'm afraid of the waves," said Tiddeley Winks. "Well," at last said Tiddeley Winks, who, after all, was the braver of the two, "we wanted to see the world, so I guess we must take what comes to us. Now just skip around, and watch for whale and sharks, even if you do get your mouth full of salt water, but I must confess I like fresh water swimming better." "We weren't born for salt water," sobbed Tiddeley Wee. "We're out of place. It's impossible for us to live." "Oh, get out of place. It's impossible for us to live." "Suppose it isn't customary for our kind to live in salt water, we're going to live. See, I feel it in my bones. Now step lively, and watch out for the big fish. At least we're away from that war trouble. Sharks aren't half so bad as big war ships and fighting. I like to see the world, but I like peace. That was some scare." And the Tiddeley Twins settled down in the coolest, calmest spot they could find on the very edge of the Black Sea, waiting for their next adventure. Now just wait patiently, little ones, until next week, and you will hear the second thrilling adventure of the Tiddeley Twins. Lovingly, AUNT ESTE.
