

Women AND THEIR Interests

The "New" Girl and the "Old Fashioned"

BEATRICE FAIRFAX

"Can you tell me if there are any good men in this world of ours? Men who would like a girl friend for what she is, not for her looks and clothes or because she happens to be a 'game sport,' as I have often heard? I am twenty and not considered bad looking, but I find because I detest this 'game sporting,' I am called a bit old-fashioned," writes

My dear girl, this world is full of fine men—men who admire the worthwhile qualities in women and loathe the very qualities which you imagine are attractive. This wide world is filled with men who like the sweet, modest home-loving girl and who grieve because they never meet her.

Girls have silly notions of what men like, and so they cultivate the artificial charms that repel most men and deprive those men of the very things they long for in women.

I do not for a moment think that men are innately bad. No more do I think that any human being prefers a diet of indigestible sweets to good wholesome meats and vegetables. But habits of diet and of nature are easy to form. The man who is brought up from boyhood to drink his coffee without sugar seldom develops a fondness for sweetened coffee. The same principle applies all through life.

If there are too few "good men" in the world—the women are at least half to blame.

A good mother owes it to herself, to her son and to womanhood to bring up her son to respect and admire the fineness of women instead of the mere animal charm.

Mothers ought to make friends with their boys.

Mothers ought to win the confidence of their sons. They ought to talk over the pleasures, as well as their duties and responsibilities. They ought to instill ideals of righteous manhood as well as of successful money-making ability. They ought to see that their sons knew refined girls and boys. And above all, they ought to so conduct their own lives that their sons, through respecting and admiring them, would come to reverence all womanhood.

A boy whose mother has started him out in life with an armor of fineness and strength is extremely unlikely to become a coarse and brutal man.

But that there may be good men in this world, the girls and women they meet must be fine, too.

For the sake of passing popularity or good times, some silly little girls lower their own standards of fineness. But they hurt themselves and all of life in so doing.

A girl can afford to be called "old-fashioned." Most of the loveliest things in life are old-fashioned! But no girl can afford to be called a "game sport" and lower her own dignity and the respect that good men want to have for women by relaxing any of her sweet "old-fashioned" virtues and finenesses.

There are millions of good men in the world. Be worthy of them, my dear girls, and set them a high standard so they will strive to be worthy of you.

The Last Shot

By FREDERICK PALMER

(Copyright, 1914, by Charles Scribner's Sons)

After a time, her ear becoming accustomed to the firing as a city dweller's to the distant roar of city traffic, Mrs. Galland slept. But Marta could not follow her advice. If, transiently at least, she had found something of the peace of the confessional, the vigor of youth was in her arteries; and youth cannot help remaining awake under some conditions. She tiptoed across the hall into her own room and seated herself by the window. The symbol of what the ear had heard the eye saw—war, working in tones of the landscape by day with smokeless powder; war, revealed by its tongues of flame at night. Ugly bursts of fire from the higher hills spread to the heavens like an aurora borealis and broke their messengers in sheets of flame over the lower hills—the batteries of the Browns sprinkling death about the heads of the gunners of the Grays enflaming their batteries. Staccato flashes from a single point counted so many bullets from an automatic, which directed by the beams of the search-lights, found their targets in sections of advancing infantry. Hill crests, set off with flashes running back and forth, demarcated infantry lines of the Browns assisting the automatics.

There were lulls between the crashes of the small arms and the heavy, throaty speech of the guns; lulls that seemed to say that both sides had paused for a breathing spell; lulls that allowed the battle in the distance to be heard in its pervasive undertone. In one of them, when even the undertone had ceased for a few seconds, Marta caught faintly the groans of a wounded man—one of the crew of a Gray dirigible burned by an explosion and brought in his agony softly to earth by a billowing piece of envelope which acted as a parachute.

Fighting proceeded in La Tir in stages of ferocity and blank silence. The upper part of the town, which the Browns still held, was in darkness; the lower part, where the Grays were, was illuminated.

"Another one of Lanny's plans!" thought Marta. "He would have them work in the light, while we fire out of obscurity!"

Soon all the town was in darkness, for the Grays had cut the wire in the main conduit shortly after she had heard the groans of the wounded man. There the automatics broke out in a mad storm, voicing their feelings at getting a company in close order in a street for the space of a minute, before those who escaped could plaster themselves against doorways or find cover in alleys. Then silence from the automatics and a cheer from the Browns that rasped out its triumph like the rubbing together of steel files.

From the line of defense, that included the first terrace of the Galland grounds as the angle of a redoubt, not a shot, not a sound; silence on the part of officers and men as profound as Mrs. Galland's slumber, while one of the Browns' search-lights, like some great witch's slow-turning eye in a narrow radius, covered the lower terraces and the road.

Marta gave intermittent glances at the garden; the glances of a guardian. She happened to be looking in that direction when figures sprang across the road, crouching, running with the short, quick steps of no body movement accompanying that of the legs. The search-light caught them in merciless silhouette and the automatic and the rifles from behind the sandbags on the first terrace let go. Some of the figures dropped and lay in the road and she knew that she had seen men hit for the first time. Others, she thought, got safely to the cover of the gutter on the garden side. Of those on the road, some were still and some she saw were moving slowly back on their stomachs to safety. Now the search-light laid its beam steadily on the road. Again silence. From the upper terrace came a great voice, like that of the guns, from a human throat:

"Why didn't we level those terraces? They'll creep up on one to the other!" It was Stransky.

In answer was another voice—Del-larme's.

"Perhaps there wasn't time to do everything. If they get as far as the first terrace—well, in case of a crisis, we have hand-grenades. But, God knows, I hope we shall not have to use them."

After an interval, more figures made a rush across the road. They, too, in Stransky's words, paid a price for seeing the garden. But the flashes from the rifles and the automatic provided a target for a Gray battery. The blue spark that flies from an overhead trolley or a third rail, multiplied a hundredfold, broke in Marta's face. It was dazzling, blinding as a bolt of lightning a few feet distant, with the thunder crash at the same second, followed by the thrashing hum of bullets and fragments against the side of the houses.

Sisters of Mercy Found Dead on Cathedral Floor

Special to The Telegraph

Paris, Sept. 24.—The German bombardment of Rheims Cathedral appears to have been in retaliation when the French planted their artillery in the city itself and replied to the enemy's guns with great vigor. Blood was flowing down the steps of the Cathedral when Thomas Sildell, of New York, with two other Americans, arriving in the city on Friday, having successfully passed through the French lines. Mr. Sildell and his friends passed Friday night in Rheims. At intervals during Friday and Saturday, he said, shells fell through the great windows into the nave and side aisles and irreparable damage was done to the facade and to the Cathedral floor.

Mr. Sildell said shells fell upon prisoners, killing three or four and wounding others, and four sisters of mercy also lay dead on the floor of the Cathedral.

"All around were figures of kneeling women," he continued. "Their lips were moving in fervent prayer, apparently beseeching intercession from St. Joan of Arc, whose figure, crowned with white flowers and looking ethereally calm in the tumult, was untouched by shot and shell. The equestrian statue of the maid outside the Cathedral is unharmed except its pedestal, part of which was shot away. The statue of the Virgin Mary with child had been reduced to dust."

Emperor Praises Men in His Son's Regiment

By Associated Press

London, Sept. 24.—$40 A. M.—Emperor William, after reviewing the troops commanded by his son, Prince Oscar, following the battle of Verdun, spoke to the soldiers, says a Copenhagen dispatch to the Daily News.

"I salute you," said the Emperor, after embracing the Prince. "I have often seen your gallant regiment at maneuvers, and it is a great pleasure to meet you again on conquered grounds. The heroic deeds at Verdun will be engraved in the history of the war forever in golden letters. Your regiment has upheld the glorious traditions of your forefathers in 1870 and 1871."
