Marietta, Pa., Sept. 26.—Philip Vonhausen, who had a number of homers and Maltese pigeons, the majority crosses, sold part of them to Edgar R. Villee, and his poultry, consisting of Rhode Island Red pullets and crosses, to Charles Hummer at a fair price.—Elmer E. Lindemuth, a former resident of Marietta, but now of Clearfield, has been elected vice-president of the First National Bank of Bradford and has removed to that place. Mr. Lindemuth was cashier of the Clearfield National Bank.—The seventh annual outing of the Merry Makers was held yesterday at the Maple Hurst cottage, opposite this place. The guests numbered about forty, from Marietta, Columbia, York and Lancaster. — Ex-Burgess John Kugle raised in his garden a curiosity in the shape of a head of cabbage with sixteen smaller heads. It is of the late Flat Dutch variety and every head is perfectly formed and solid.—Mrs. Washington L. Hershey, who was critically ill, is somewhat improved.—Mr. and Mrs. Frank Loucks yesterday enterted their forty-first wedding anniversary in a quiet manner at their home. — Miss Margaret Burkholder spent a week at Harrisburg, the guest of relatives.

THE AMAZING ADVENTURES OF THE TIDDLELY TWINS.

Told in Six Scares.
SCARE NUMBER TWO.

Down by the Black Sea on the South Coast of Russia, lived two big-beared fishermen. All day long they cast their nets and drew up hundreds of great fish and little fish and all kinds of fish to sell in the markets of Russia.

Now one day soon after the Tiddlely Twins, who had left their mountain stream hofne—away off in the Black Forest, and had traveled two thousand miles, arrived in the Black Sea, and were trying to hide themselves in every corner, because they were afraid of the big fish, the two fishermen cast their nets again. Down, down into the deep water came the funny little thing, or rather big thing—made of brown cord and full of meshes.

"It wonder what that thing is that is coming down here?" asked Tiddlely Winks.

"Let's go and see," said Tiddlely Wee.

rather big thing—made of brown cord and tull to moder what that thing is that is coming down here?" asked Tiddlely Winks.

"Let's go and see," said Tiddlely Wee.
So off together they went with a lot of other big fish and lay down in the great big brown thing full of meshes.

All of a sudden they began to feel just like you feel when you step into an elevator and the man shuts the door. They were going up, up, up, and it was a different feeling from that which they had when they swam to surface. They were just being gradually pulled up.

"Dear me," said Tiddlely Winks, "will' our adventures never cease? Now what does this mean?"

Poor fellow he soon found out; for it was not long before they were pulled to shore—and both began to gasp for breath.

"I am drowning in this air," said Tiddlely Winks. "Let me back into the water." But no one seemed to hear.

Just then the beared face of one of the fishermen looked into his."

Just then the beared face of one of the fishermen looked into his.

"Look here, Michael Scolavitch," said he. "Did you ever catch such a little fish in the great Black Sea? or such a saucy looking fellow? It really looks like a little mountain stream fish."

Then another bearded face looked down into the face of Tiddlely Winks.

"Well, I'll be! I guess not!" And here's another one just exactly like him," as he hauled up Tiddlely Wee.

Both little fish trembled violently but the queer fishermen did not seem to mind in the least. They just held on "Well, they are curiosities" said the first fisherman again. "They are too small to eat or to sell. So I tell you what let's do. Let us get a jar, and send them along as a gift to our great Czar. Let us tell him they are the only fish of their kind ever found in the great sea. Ferhaps he will feel pleased and keep them in an aquarium in the palace."

So before they knew what had happened Tiddlely Winks and Tiddlely Wee were hustled into a jar of fresh water.

"H'm" said Tiddlely Winks, "mighty small quarters these are, but I like the smell and the feel of fresh water. That salt water was awful!"

"But oh, dear," groaned Tiddlely Wee, "such a small house! I can't move."

But it did not matter what they said, the fishermen didn't seem to hear; so the first thing they knew they were boarded up in a dark box and sent, water and all, flying across the great country of Russia. On, on they went until they reacched the capitol, Petrograd. Here they were hustled around and looked at with curious eyes when the workers in the stations saw they were labeled for the Czar.

"What a funny thing to send to the Czar," said they, and laughed. He surely would never eat such tiny fish. What will he determ what was puzzling the little Tiddlely Twins. What would he do with them? But they were soon to learn—for in a few moments they were hustled into the great palace of the Czar, and soon were shown to the august person himself.

"Well of all things!" said the great Czar. "Who would presume to send me two such little fish?"

Then he read on a tag accompanying them: "The only specimen of this kind ever found in the Black Sea. We send them to our beloved Czar with our compliments."

This made the Czar laugh long and hearty. "Well," said he, "I have received all sorts of presents in my life but never one quite so insignificent as these two tiny fish. I sort of like them, however. They almost have a human look. Take them and put them in a gold bowl and set them in the throne room. They shall be my mascot.

Whereupon the circle fish laughed a sort of a fish laugh, that no on the content" said Tiddlely Winks. "If our folks back there in the Black Forest could but see us now, they would be proud of us. Mascot to the Czar! Phew, we're going some."

"I' guess our troubles are at an end," said Tiddlely Wee. "I think I'll lie down in this beautiful gold

Now if you'll be real good little ones, next week I'll tell you of the third scare of the Tiddlely Twins.

Lovingly,

AUNT ESTE.
