his eye. And then the dreadful thing happened. For before they knew it war was there—right in the depths of the seal Suddenly it seemed as if the very waters of the North Sea were war! Suddenly submarine mines exploded—and big war ships arose, plowing through the water. Poor Tiddlely Winks and Tiddlely Wee began to feel sorry they were alive.

"I believe the world has gone war made," said Tiddlely Winks. "I don't believe there is any place safe." "Well, all I am thinking about," said Tiddlely Wee, "is how to get out of this frightful North Sea." "Let us hunt for the first net or anything that comes along, in order to get out," said Tiddlely Wee. "Anything is better than being blown to pieces—I would rather die a natural death any day."

in order to get out," said Tiddlely Wee. "Anything is better than being blown to pieces-I would rather die a natural death any as," So Tiddlely Winks and Tiddlely Wee hunted and watched for a net. At last one day they were rewarded. There came along a big ship, and the men let down a net. "We want a good meal of fish," said they. So into the net cuddled the Tiddlely Twins, and up, up they were drawn once more. "This is our end," said the Tiddlely Twins. But once again they did not know everything, for when those men who hidd almost too small to eat, they laughed a largh." "They did not know everything, for when those men who hidd and almost too small to eat, they laughed a largh." "They did not know everything for when those men who hidd and almost too small to eat. It guess well throw them back again be-they the did let the fellows so much unlike the other fish. "They re nd it to eat. I guess well throw them back again be-had tried so hard to die a natural death!" "It the the Tiddlely Twins quaked in their tails. "Throw them back to those awful submarine mines! Oh, dear me-when they had tried so hard to die a natural death!" "Aust then a dear little boy with a sunny face, blue eyes and a bob cut came running up to the fishermen. "Oh, please give me those little fish. I'd like to take them home to show the boys over these something real alive that came out of the North Ses. Please give them to me." "The a little American boy, who has been traveling in Europe this summer with my mother and father, and we're going back home as fast as we can. I know they'l let me take them along. Please give them to me." "Tetch a bowl, sonny. They're no go to us"." So ne again the Tiddlely Twins felt the folks. "The last sease of the Tiddlely Twins and where the firsh water, as the little boy dropped them, one by one, into the bowl, and carried them above deck to show to his folks."

The last scare of the Tiddlely Twins and where they finally found peace will be told you next week. Be sure to look for it. Lovingly yours, AUNT ESTE.

Pinkham's Veg-etable Compound and soon felt like a new woman. I had no pains, slept well, had good appetite and could do almost all my own work for a family of four. petite and was so all my own work for a family of four.
