

Susquehanna's Deep Water Fish See Real Diver For First Time

Marietta Man Finishes Some Work on Dam-And Gives Nervous Finy Folk the Hysterics

If the fish that loaf round the dam in the deeper water of the Susque-hanna are of a nervous temperament at all, they ought to be pretty nearly hysterical before nightfall. Really, most any fish would.

All day a helmeted, air-pump fed, leadened-footed deeper water diver has been in their midst.

The diver has been employed by the contractor entirely because of the extreme cold water. So a class of the extreme cold water. So a class of the with arransistant to run the air-pump, fasten on the helmet, and so on, was employed and the deep-water workers were busy in the twenty feet of "Wells water" near the Cumberland shore until sundown. And it's safe to say that the oldest, wisest fish in the Susquehanna has ing some sandbags around the base of Really the first theatrical manager in the city to arrange for a Belgian benefit was Clyde D. Klinger, of the Palace moving picture house. Yesterday he sent a letter to Mayor Royal asking him to have a representative audit his receipts for Friday, November 13, because on that date 50 per cent. of the money taken in at the theater will be given to the Telegraph's relief fund.

This offer was readily accepted by the Mayor, who caused the following letter to be sent to-day to Manager Klinger:

State-Wide Interdict Against Movement of Cattle Without Permit From Officials

NO MEAT FAMINE LIKELY

Dr. Marshall Says That Quarantine Is Working Out About the Way It Was Hoped

Pennsylvania's hard and fast quarantine against any shipments of cattle without State permits because o the prevalence of the foot and mouth disease among the steers, cows, sheep and swine of a score of counties, went into operation to-day and close to 100,000 circulars giving the details of the quarantine are being mailed by the State Livestock Sanitary Board so that every person interested in cattle may know what must be done to cradicate the disease. It is not believed that the quarantine will result in a meat famine. Most of the cities have a normal meat and cattle supply, according to information received here and there is no quarantine on the shipment of carcasses if they are sound and hoofs and hides have been removed. Cattle may be moved from place to place if sound and for immediate shipment under State permits so that the drastic steps necessary to isolate the cattle may not work as great a hard-ship as feared after all.

The State Livestock Board, which established the quarantine last night, is sending the quarantine regulations to 35,000 cattle owners and farmers, 2,000 cattle dealers, 800 veterinarians and officials of railroads, stock Yards, station agents and many more, calling upon them to lend co-operation in the fight again the disease.

Fifty-five State agents and fifty federal agents, all qualified experts, are at work under joint State and federal direction to conduct the campaign. Public sales of cattle have been prohibited and no movement over a road may be made without a State permit. Only such hay as was harvested before September 1 may be handled. This will have the effect of curtailing supply of packing material.

Early this afternoon it was stated at the office of State Veterinarian C. J. Marshall that the quarantine was progressing satisfactorily and that no difficulties had been met. When the action of New York in quarantining turkeys was called to the attention of the officials the statement was made that only turkeys on infected premises would be considered in quarantine in this State. the State Livestock Sanitary Board so that every person interested in cattle
