Father-in-law of One Time Poor Board Head Dies at the Almshouse

Jacob Lenker, father-in-law of Jacob J. Coleman, ex-president of the board of poor directors, died this morning at the almshouse.

Mr. Lenker, who was in his 84th year, was sent to the poorhouse April 19, 1911, when his son-in-law was head of the poor board. The old man had been an inmate there until his death, at 10 o'clock to-day. He formerly lived in Uniontown.

The problem of providing a suitable burial other than the usual disposition of the body by the county authorities is ordinarily a puzzling one for the directors just now. It is understood that unless a movement among such persons to raise funds is successful, the aged body will be turned over to an anatomical society.

of Aguascalientes depends on the attack of General Gonzales, division commander. The Querejaros, several thousand troops. Gonzales hitherto has been a staunch friend of Carranza and an enemy of Villa. While some dispatches indicated that Villa might stand by the convention, many persons here conversant with the situation believed otherwise.

Little Hope For Peace While the still a hope that hostilities may be averted by the generals themselves reaching an understanding whereby Carranza would retire, officials expect that if the convention fails, the fighting will be more extensive than anything Mexico has seen. Larger forces than have ever before been under arms have been announced, as many as 100,000 men being well equipped and almost that many more available.

No estimate of the forces Villa will control is available yet, but military experts believe that Carranza has strategic advantages in the extent of that territory dominated by his men.
