Reports Emanating From Petrograd Say German Advance Has Been Stopped

FIGHTING ALONG YSER HALTED

Servia Denies Austrian Victory Although Retreat Is Admitted

Important advantages, though not of a decisive nature, are claimed to-day by the French war office. Germany's new attack toward the eastern end of the battle line across France with the supposed purpose of isolating the important fortress of Verdun is said in the French official statement to have been thwarted, at least temporarily. In the Argonne region, where the main attack has been in progress for several days, German entrenchments are reported to have been blown up, while near Verdun it is said that the forces of the allies have "made progress."

Except for the fighting in the Argonne and near Verdun, there is comparatively little activity in Belgium and France. At one point in Belgium a German attack by infantry was made, which, the French war office says, was "immediately repulsed." At other points the French assert that they have won the advantage in the artillery duel which has been the main feature of the fighting since the cold, wet weather compelled cessation of activity by cavalry and infantry. A German official statement says that the allies are showing great activity with artillery along almost the entire front.
