the proportions of an avalanche or a Niagara before the final two weeks are done. Each meeting seems to be ahead of the one before as the leaven of Stough's strenuous preaching, which started four weeks ago, is making its way into the dough of Harrisburg. As Stough said, "It will be something more than a big, well-baked loaf when all the loafers of the city get in line and hit the trail." Perhaps' the strongest' point in the day's work, aside from the large totals in money and numbers of trail-hitters, was the coming forward of a man who has been a bartender of the city for more than ten years, who was so moved at the afternoon service. He shook Stough's hand and said he had enough of the booze business and would quit his job as soon as he got out of the tabernacle.

At the Men's Meeting

At the Men's Meeting
The afternoon's service for men was as large as any yet held in point of attendance and even greater in results of pledge signers and amount of money collected, than any previous meeting. Dr. Stough was kept so busy for afteen minutes taking in envelopes containing dollars, fives and tens that he could not count them fast enough. Among the gifts was one of fifty dollars and several checks for twenty and twenty-five dollars each.

At the close of his lecture and after emphasizing the power of the Christ ideal to make men lead better lives morally, Dr. Stough put the direct question, "How many of you men are desirous of leading better lives."
Literally thousands of hands shot up all over the tabernacle.

The Voice That Brought Tears

Then Mrs. Stough, who had just come from the women's meeting at Chestnut street hall, stepped on the platform amid the thundering applause of the biggest audience of men ver assembled in the city, and sang her sweet mother's voice, "Tell ever assembled in the city, and sang in her sweet mother's voice, "Tell Mother I'll Be There."

Men who, it may safely be said, had not shed a tear in twenty years, pulled out their handkerchiefs and used them. There was a wave of restlessness, of damp eyes and snuffling of noses seldom seen in a crowd of men, and those who had possibly not been touched by the strong language of Dr.

A Policeman Sends Up $5
At last night's service the collection by subscription was continued and $1,600 was pledged in addition to about $250 "pan" collection. The money came in amounts from $100 down to one dollar bills from individuals, Sunday School classes, Bible classes and various friends of the campaign. A policeman in the rear sent up five dollars for which he got about sixty seconds applause. The ushers sent up a flour sack with $156; then the choir gave $160; then the ushers sent up a flour sack with $156; then the choir rose to $200 by pledge but actually raised $223 before the close of the meeting.

Stough preached from what he called the sweetest verse in the Bible, "For God so loved the world." He described God as being not a severe, wrathful being, but as the great and kind father who believes in his children in spite of their defects, and loves them for what they might be under the surface of the defiled life of the human race.

The World God Loved

Stough described in a masterly way some of his travels in western mountains and valleys and some of the glorious sights in the clear air of the Rockies and the Pacific Slope, but he said all this is not at all to compare with the wonderful vision of man made in the image of God.

"The mind of man made with the power to understand the wonders of God's making is a far more wonderful thing than the mountains, the oceans, the beauties of earth and the stars above. This sight of you men and women filling this tabernacle with one impulse for human betterment is a sight that far transcends the wonders of nature."

He described home life and the love of a father for his children as being but a slender illustration of God's love for man. He defined the Christ as the heart of God, which mankind can scarcely understand because it is impossible for finiteness to comprehend infinity. He spoke of the rays of God's might passing through the medium of a man and be Stough were visibly affected by the voice of his wife. Many pledge cards were distributed and many hundreds were signed and returned to the ushers and members of the party. More than 300 filled in the cards. Mrs. Stough sang another stanza of her song while more men came forward. The first trailhitter to announce himself was a young man who said he had been a sailor leading a wild life but was so much touched by the meeting that he was determined to mend his ways.

Bartender Ouits Job

Then out of the packed mass of men at the front came a trailhitter to shake the hand of Stough, but Spooner saw him first and recognized him as a bartender of the city who has been wavering for some time on the point of persuasion to hit the trail. With the help of Spooner he climbed to the platform and there Stough embraced him and told the crowd who he was and what a struggle he must have had to come forward and confess Christ. The evangelist said he considered this one of the greatest triumphs of the campaign.

carnate in Jesus the God-man and man-God who interpreted God to mankind.

The Sacrifice of Calvary

He explained the need of Christ as a mediator between God and man by saying there is no real love that does not include self-sacrifice and suffering, and that there must be a Christ and the tragedy of Calvary if there is a God of love. "As long as there is a Cross," he said "T'll never despair of a sinner in this city."

The trailhitters numbered exactly 75 last night, and more than 125 Saturday night. There were twelve family groups, among them a father, mother, son and his wife; parents and four children; six neighbors in a bunch. One man had started home from the meeting but returned and hit the trail, a woman who had been hesitating for three nights and a man who had been first urged to hit the trail on the special railroad night several weeks ago.

The Weariness of the Felsh paign.

The lecture on "The Scarlet Man" was a crashing blow at the immorality of men and a statement of the terrible results not only on men themselves but on the race, the wives and the coming generations. He made a stinging indictment of fathers who fail to tell their growing boys the facts of life and let them run the streets to learn things from vile companions. The Weariness of the Felsh
The individual experiences were too numerous to be related and Stough himself said he was ready to fall over with weariness after his strenuous streets to learn things from vile companions.

Not a Personal Indictment
He said he knew there were thousands of men in the audience who might be hit by his remarks, but explained that he did not mean any personal indictment, and was only making an appeal for help in his efforts to bring about a moral reform in connection with his evangelistic work.

In beginning he said this is the age of the thoroughbred in the animal world, but that little or no attention is paid to the breeding of human beings. He said, "A man who is extremely careful about the breeding of his dogs, or his cattle and sheep will allow his daughter ot keep company with and smarry some pimply-faced, measly runt of a man who may be rotten with disease. He will pay more attention to his animals than to his daughter.

The Roosting of the Chickens

He read a report of the poor board of Dauphin county showing the state of this disease in this locality that surprised many of the audience. He also declared that he has good authority for a list of the immoral resorts of Harrisburg that are still doing business despite the recent cleaning up by the police department and said he is prepared to give this information to the chief of police if he desires it.

"Many of you men know what I am saying because you have had the chickens come home to roost by feeling the effects of your early vices."
