Helen and Warren Take a Lesson in the New Dance and Surprise Themselves.

"You'll come to see if you like it anyway, won't you?" Mrs. Dalton had urged and Helen had reluctantly acquiesced.

"I don't know what the world's coming to," growled Warren as he and Helen turned into a door with the number over the doorway and went up a flight of narrow stairs.

"I don't know what the world's coming to," growled Warren as he and Helen turned into a door with the number over the doorway and went up a flight of narrow stairs.

"You see, dear Mrs. Dalton had to take what she could get, and as the dancing teacher had no quarters of his own, and none of us had a house large enough for the class, Mrs. Dalton thought this would be the best and isn't very expensive, either."

"Shouldn't think it would be, looks like the quarters here to quarters at Helen's."

"Helen tries to make Warren more cheerful."

"Oh, Warren, you know that isn't true. I wish you would try to make the best of things."

"Yes, after you've dragged me over here, I suppose there's nothing else to do. Come on, I guess this is the way."

"How do you do, Mr. Curtis? I'm awfully glad you decided to come. I've been doing some fancy dancing for us with his cousin, who has promised to help him with the class."

"Mrs. Dalton hurried back across the room to the crowd gathered around Mr. Fleming, and then, "he entered was now started again, and Mrs. Dalton began dancing with a tall, very thin young man."

"That must be Mr. Fleming," whispered Helen, and then, "I didn't know Mrs. Dalton could dance as well as that."

Warren growled out something unintelligible and Helen began to be afraid that they would have to give it up after all. Secretly she longed to be able to dance some of the fascinating steps that Mrs. Fleming was teaching Mrs. Dalton. If Warren would only get interested, they might both learn.

"I want you to meet Mrs. Curtis, Mr. Fleming, and Mr. Curtis; they are both planning to join our dancing class—at least I hope so. Oh, excuse me a moment, here are Mr. and Mrs. Stevens, well I surely didn't expect you people here to-night."

"Nor, I," said Mrs. Stevens coming over to Helen and slipping her hand inside her arm. "But here we are."

told Mr. Stevens he simply had to come and I guess he came just out of curiosity. Anyway, I want to learn to dance and here of all places."

"They all laughed. "Well I don't see any use of waiting any longer," said Mrs. Dalton, "suppose we begin, Mr. Fleming."

Mr. Fleming signified his willingness, and the scattered group sat down in the chairs along the wall. Mr. Stevens came over to Warren and grinned sheepishly.

"I feel like a fool, Curtis," he remarked, "like going to the dentist's and not understanding it," whispered Helen, "I had a terrible time getting him here."

"A young girl who couldn't have been more than eighteen put a new record on the Victrola, and then asked Mr. Dalton's husband if he would try it with her. At the same time Mr. Fleming came over to Helen and asked her if she would try."

"But I don't know the faintest thing about it," protested Helen. "I don't want to try some one else first."

"We're all in the same boat," said Mrs. Stevens, encouragingly. "Go on—you'll never learn if you don't try to."

Helen blushed miserably. She felt terribly embarrassed, and with the eyes of every one present upon her, she rose and stepped out on the floor.

"You walk as though you wouldn't have any one present upon her," said Mr. Fleming, encouragingly. "I noticed you when you came into the room. You saw."

"No, I've only watched it. It seems incredible, I know, but my husband has done it in the new dances, and so I never learned."

"Well, simply follow me and the more you think you'll get along." Helen fell into the swing immediately, leaving everything to her partner and Mrs. Dalton.

"It was splendid, simply wonderful," she said enthusiastically. Her hair was curling from the face of just damp little ringlets, and her cheeks were pink from the exercise. She was very pretty at the moment and Warren who had been watching her closely, gave her a sudden look as she sat down beside him.

"Dear, did I dance very badly?" She asked, tucking in a stray lock of hair and glancing at him sideways. "You were fine," said Mr. Stevens, leaning across Warren, "look at Emily, though I don't imagine she's having the time of her life by any means. Mrs. Stevens was trying to imitate Mr. Fleming's steps as best she could, but from her peering countenance she was not having a very good time. She gave Helen a despairing glance as she passed, and Helen could not help laughing."

A moment later Mrs. Dalton came up with little Mr. Curtis. "It's your turn, Mr. Curtis," she said laughingly. "Let's see if you can do as well as your wife." And before he knew it Warren found himself on the floor with the small girl as partner.

Later, when they were all leaving, Helen turned to Warren impulsively. "Didn't we have a good time, dear?" Mrs. Stevens says I did the one-step better than any one else there."

"Don't think I was so very bad myself," said Warren complacently. "After a few lessons I ought to dance as well as any one. What do you think?"

How Famous Actresses Banish Superfluous Hair Betty Lorraine, the popular actress who won fame in "The Little Parisienne" and other Comedies writes: "Theatrical women are now using a remarkable prescription that acts like magic in curing all traces of unsightly hair growths. It is Mrs. Osgood's Wonder. Unlike the electric needle, it can be used with perfect safety. Unlike evil-smelling depilatories, it doesn't burn the skin. I used it first over a year ago and have not had a trace of superfluous hair since."

It would be hard to find a prettier or smarter little coat than this one. The cape ripples becomingly over the shoulders and can be made single or double as liked and the short body portion, which always allows a long skirt, makes a becoming feature. Here the material is one of the new zibeline cloths with trimming of simple fur but there was never a time when there were so many beautiful fabrics suited to little girls coats. The fur cloths are marvelous in texture and quality, the zibelines are beautiful, broadcloth is being much used, serge is always handsome and durable and velvet, velveteen and corduroy are greatly in vogue. Brown and green are favorite colors and this coat is bottle green in tone while the trimming is white rabbit. Brown corduroy or brown velveteen with natural beaver would be charming and beaver is being extensively worn.
