CHRISTMAS - TREES SUPPORT KEEPS NEEDLES FRESH.

A Christmas-tree holder which keeps the tree green and prevents the leaves from falling, has been devised. It consists of a japanned pan which has a conical receptacle fitted in the middle of it into which the tree is set. Three metal braces, which may be folded down when not in use, extend from the rim of the pan and are screwed to the trunk of the tree. When the tree is in place, water is poured into the container, preventing the tree from drying out and to a degree making it less inflammable. From the December Popular Mechanics Magazine.

PLANTING ORCHARDS ON STEEP HILLSIDES.

An ingenious method has been adopted by a California fruit grower for utilizing steep hillsides for the planting of fruit trees. One regular spacing he built semicircular walls of cement and cobblestones, the walls curving outward from the hillside and forming retaining walls for the planting of the trees. The soil is leveled in the centers of these level spaces. A picture of one of these hillside orchards appears in the December Popular Mechanics Magazine.

A WAY TO SAVE TEETH

The wise old saw, "never pull a tooth until all else fails," is equally true and more deep-rooted among the profession and the laity every day. There is good reason for this. The tooth is surely more coming out unless you are quick to take action likely to arrest the trouble. Most of the tooth trouble comes from microbes or germs that live in the mouth in sheltered places. You don't realize the danger until you are doing their deadly work until it is too late. Some fine morning the glass shows you a reddening gum, yellow teeth, or a loosening of you notice a black speck on the enamel. It is well for you if you are sensitive you notice the trouble in time, for science says you can save your teeth.

The old saying that your teeth stop aching as soon as you get up your courage to go to a dentist is strong upon us—indeed, hundreds and hundreds of teeth would have been saved to their owners had a little precaution been taken in time. When the gums recede from the tooth, are swollen and tender and ulcerated, don't wait until they pass away from the tooth. When our teeth become loose and rock to and fro and you use your tongue to keep this rocking up, you can surely prevent further annoyance if you will but go to your drugist and get just four ounces of fluid ergan. (No more need be needed) and put a teaspoonful to the mouth morning, noon and night, and keep in the mouth a few minutes. Don't use water for a little time. Your gums will be cleaned of microbes and infestations of rich, red, rosy gum will be seen in the morning—all the bacteria will disappear over night. You will free the distressed tooth of its attendant discomfort, as it dissolves the infestations from the teeth. Bleeding of the gums will stop, the crevices and lurking places for germs will be washed clean and from a healthy tissue will begin to make the teeth firm and strong in the gums and altogether you will be free of mouth and teeth troubles. Don't use your tongue to rock the teeth or get out the infections, as these little microbes that eat away the enamel of the teeth and make them yellow and subject to decay will disappear entirely. Yellow teeth, the white, the black, on the enamel comes off, and your teeth are as white and as strong as ever.—Advertisement.

KITCHENER RECAVES KAISER MUST FALL

us and for all the world. If three years are required for the undertaking or more than three years, the world will find that we, for our part, are prepared to go on, and ready to go on except watermarked to go on, and certain to go on in any event this war can have but one outcome—one ultimate conclusion.

"The Germans still think they will win," said Lord Kitchener, speaking with the infection that made the remark part plain statement and part question. "I wonder how long a time they think it will take them to win?"

"They are still fully confident," Mr. Cobb replied, "but they have changed their schedule of their time card."

Her Lord Kitchener made use of the one outright gesture he used. He brought his first down hard on the table in front of him with a thump. It was a big, sinewy fist—put it in a glove and it would make you think of a buck's haunch—and the thump was audible and solid.

Calls German Campaign Failure

"They are right in one regard," he said slowly; "it will take longer than a year to end this war. But they are wrong in another regard; they are wrong when they think they are going to win—if, indeed, in their hearts they honestly think that. They are not going to win."

"Their campaign in the west is a failure. It is a failure already, and it will become more and more a failure as time passes. When an army of invasion ceases to take territory, it has lost its principal function and has failed in its principal object. When that army hides itself in trenches and fights at long range, it is doing nothing except waste itself; and especially is this true when that army, having reached its maximum of strength and efficiency and aggressiveness months before, is now losing in all those essentials."

"To lie in that unending chain of trenches which stretches across Northern France for hundreds of miles, like a long gray snake—that is not waging a successful campaign. That is not even waging war, as I conceive war to be. For an army of invasion to lie in trenches, it must be under certain circumstances, it might be a mistake for an army of defense so to dispose itself. For an army of invasion to lie in trenches, it is a mistake. Well, the future will justify my belief. Of that I am as sure as I am sure that I am alive."

Aero Attacks Not War

"Dropping bombs on cities, whether those cities be defended or undefended, is not waging war. It is a cost spectacular byplay which counts for nothing in the final result and really does not count in the detail of momentary advantage."

"Paris might be captured, and still the war would go on. England might be invaded—though I believe the enemy has not yet worked out complete plans for that undertaking—and still the war would go on. Germany might take and keep the other side of the Channel, as she has already taken Antwerp, and still the war would go on. Belgium might be made a captive province for the time being, and still the war would go on."

"This war is going on until Germany has been defeated. There is no other possible contingency."

"Have not the conditions of the German soldiers been shaken by recent events in the western theater of war, and especially by what has been happening in France during the last month? What do the men think of the failure of the German plan of campaign toward Paris?"

Great Mistakes of Generals

"I do not understand why the knowledge of the truth of the situation as it exists to-day has not spread through the armies and effected the men. They must guess—as we here on the other side know—that their leaders have made some terrible mistakes. All generals make mistakes, just as all men make them; but the mistakes they have made are such great, such tremendously great, mistakes!"

As the interview proceeded, Lord Kitchener asked the German attitude toward the soldiers of the allies. Mr. Cobb replied that the Germans regard the Russian soldier as a stubborn fighter and the officers incompetent; they concede the excellence of the French light field artillery, but say the French soldier lacks physical endurance; the English are the hardest fighting men they have to meet, and they speak particularly well of the fighting qualities of the Scotch, but say there are not enough British troops in the west to count as a factor in the western campaign.

"That is a defect," Lord Kitchener said, referring to the numerical strength of the British, "which we are taking steps to remedy. There is no better fighting man alive than the Scotchman—anywhere. In what way do the Germans justify their treatment of Belgium?"

Mr. Cobb replied that the German attitude had changed since September, and, having first defended invasion from military necessity, they were now basing it on the discovery of secret papers in the Belgian archives exposing Belgium as a potential and actual ally of France and England before hostilities.

Their Alibi Too Late

"In other words," commented Lord Kitchener, "the Germans proposed their alibi after the act was committed—which weakens the alibi without excusing the act. It is a poor defense that must be changed in the middle of the trial."

"War has its ethics, which often upset the ethics of peace," he went on, speaking of the German course in Belgium; "but if it be granted that the man in uniform holds absolute dominion over the lives and property of noncombatants of a nation, he loses, to my conception, his proper and ordained functions. If that standard is to prevail, we shall all cease to be soldiers and shall enroll hired executioners and send them forth against our enemy with guns and hangman's nooses and firebrands in their hands."

"Years ago, in the Sudan, I was called on to fight an enemy who practiced this code; but that enemy was a

REICHSTAG VOTES GREAT WAR CREDIT

which written proof, he said, had since come to light. These were not at Germany's disposal on August 4, he declared, although well known to British statesmen. This declaration met with prolonged applause.

Blames British

The final portion of the chancellor's speech was devoted to an indictment of British policy as being morally responsible for the war, although Russia was directly responsible, the chancellor said, by driving through a general mobilization. Long continued applause followed the close of his speech.

Hugo Haase, the Socialist leader, on behalf of his party, stated that the Socialists remained faithful to the standpoint of their declaration of August 8. He criticized the press censorship as unnecessarily severe.

Dr. Peter Spahn, leader of the Center party, spoke in behalf of all moderate parties in favor of the war credit, which was then passed with only the dissenting voice of Dr. Liebknecht.

savage, so called, and the Germans, as they themselves tell us, are the exclusive owners of the highest civilization the world has ever seen."

CAMPANILE DESIGNED TO RESIST EARTHQUAKES.

A concrete-steel campanile, 302 ft. high, now being built on the campus of the University of California, is remarkable not only for its height but for the fact that it represents a type of structure exceedingly rare in this country. The California structure, known as the "Sather Campanile," in honor of one of the donors to the funds of the university, is said to be the highest memorial tower in the country, with the exception of the Washington Monument, at Washington, D. C. A picture of the structure is a feature of the December Popular Mechanics Magazine.

HOLDING BACK THE HUDSON WITH COFFERDAM.

"One of the greatest single pieces of cofferdam work ever undertaken in this country," says the December Popular Mechanics Magazine, "is now in the course of construction in New York Harbor, where the Hudson River is being dammed preliminary to the building of three 1,050-ft. steamship piers for the accommodation of the largest liners afloat. The dam is being extended between Forty-Fourth and Forty-Eighth streets to hold back the river, inclose the shore line, and allow excavations to be made, and the piers built. When completed, it will be approximately 800 ft. long and will have cost about $500,000."

HOW MARK TWAIN LEARNED TO REMEMBER.

In Harper's Magazine for December is printed for the first time an amusing article by Mark Twain in which he outlines a plan for remembering dates and tells how he himself utilized this plan in his lectures.

"Dates are hard to remember because they consist of figures; figures are monotonously unstriking in appearance, and they don't take hold, they form no pictures, and so they give the eye no chance to help. Pictures are the things. Pictures can make dates stick. They can make nearly anything stick—particularly if you make the pictures yourself. Indeed, that is the great point—make the pictures yourself. I know about this from experience. Thirty years ago I was delivering a memorized lecture every night, and every night I had to help myself with a page of notes to keep from getting myself mixed. The notes consisted of beginnings of sentences, and were eleven in number, and they ran something like this:

"In that region the weather—"
"At that time it was custom—"
"But in California one never heard—"
"Eleven of them. They initiated the brief divisions of the lecture and protected me against skipping. But they all looked about alike on the page; they formed no picture; I had them by heart, but I could never with certainty remember the order of their succession; therefore I always had to keep those notes by me and look at them every little while. Once I mislaid them; you will not be able to imagine the terrors of that evening. I now saw that I must invent some other protection. So I got ten of the initial letters by heart in their proper order—I, A, B, and so on—and I went on the platform the next night with these marked in ink on my ten fingers-nails. But it didn't answer. I kept track of the fingers for a while; then I lost it, and after that I was never quite sure which finger I had used last. I couldn't lick off a letter after using it, for while that would have made success certain it would also have provoked too much curiosity. There was curiosity enough without that. To the audience I seemed more interested in my finger-nails than I was in my subject; one or two persons asked me afterward what was the matter with my hands.

"It was now that the idea of pictures occurred to me; then my troubles passed away. In two minutes I made six pictures with a pen, and they did the work of the eleven catch-sentences, and did it perfectly. I threw the pictures away as soon as they were made, for I was sure I could shut my eyes and see them any time. That was a quarter of a century ago; the lecture vanished out of my head more than twenty years ago, but I could rewrite it from the pictures—for they remain."
